SEVERAL WRECKS DUE TO FREEZE

DRIVING OVER THE SLIPPERY ROADS WAS ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE

The freeze which gripped this section of Alabama last Saturday was the cause of a number of minor wrecks and mishaps in the neighborhood of Montevallo. With all the roads covered with a sheet of ice, it was very difficult for traffic to be carried on.

The Standard Oil gasoline truck, driven by Leon Busby, skidded off the road between Montevallo and Calera, and was completely demolished. The driver escaped without injury.

The big hill just out of Montevallo toward Calera, was almost impossible to negotiate with a car. Several failed to make it, and others skidded their way down.

A lady attempted to drive up the hill and failed. Her car slid to one side, while she left it and returned to town. The Betsy Ross bread truck came over the hill toward Montevallo It began to slip and slide, and the driver, Melvin Mims of Clanton, was helpless to prevent it from colliding with the parked car. No serious damage was done.

DOLE MUST STAY SAYS BANKHEAD

DECLARES RELIEF CAN'T BE ABANDONED TO STATES AND CITIES

Washington. — The Roosevelt Administration will face a strong demand by congressional blocs for continuation of the federal "dole," returning members of Congress indicated Thursday.

Among those who hold that the administration cannot abandon direct relief to states and cities is Representative William B. Bankhead, Alabama, Democratic leader of the house.

The same declaration previously was made by Representative Taylor (D., Col.), who was acting majority leader in the House last session.

Depleted state and local treasuries together with protests of taxpayers against new burdens will spur demands for further federal aid, members said.

Although the Roosevelt administration planned to take care of the 3,500,000 on Works Progress Administration rolls, it intended to end the "dole" and turn the direct relief job over to local governments.

"It is a tremendous burden for states and municipalities," said Bankhead. "They ought to be expected to bear all the burden they can and even make sacrifices. We hope the WPA and better times will reduce the load. But I believe it will be necessary for the federal government to continue some substantial form of relief outside of the WPA."

The House leader also expressed doubt about the economy movement bing launched by some members of Congress.

"We are all anxious to reduce national expenditures but to what extent we will be able to at the present time is conjectural," said Bankhead.

"We still have the rel[illegible]blem with millions out of work [illegible]omeless, and we can't in good conscience neglect these people. I don't think that the country, despite claims of those crying economy, would like to see millions in destitution."

Bankhead promised to lead a drive in the House for the $1,000,000,000 Bankhead farm tenant bill, which was passed in the Senate last session.

THE NEW YEAR 1936

The last remaining sheet of the old 1935 calendar was taken down yesterday, and the new pages for 1936 were hung in its place. The new calendar had come tightly rolled in a shipping tube.

When hung upon the wall the bottom of the sheets curled up These words flashed from the lower right corner of the last sheet: "We wish you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year."

Three hundred and sixty-six days from now we hope to be at the place where those words are printed. Thinking of the days that must pass between now and then one becomes lost in a maze of uncertainties—how many crooks in the road—how many hills to climb—how many smiles and sorrows—how many old friends to go and how many new ones to know—how many roses and how many thorns.

The New Year spreads out ahead of us. It is a leap year; a brief span of opportunity to do good, work hard, and to build another layer on the structure of life.

What we will do with it is a guess. Hope and ambition must be the spark that pushes us along through the days. We may as well tighten up our belts, spit on our hands, grab a new hold, and keep on tugging at the rope.

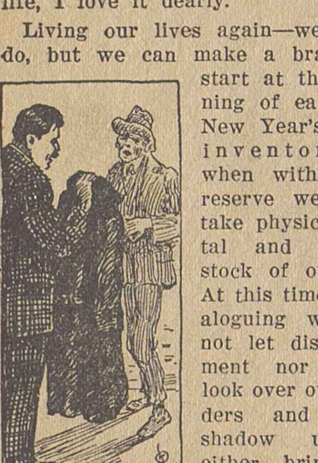
"This old world we're living in is mighty hard to beat. We get a thorn with every rose, but aint the roses sweet!"—Frank Stanton.

BEGINNINGS AGAIN

By Maria Leonard, Dean of Women, University of Illinois

"I WOULD love to live my life again," said my dear little old lady friend of ninety-four years, during the last of my regular visits to her, as she died within the month. "Live almost a century again," said I, almost catching my breath at the thought. "Yes," said she, "for I love life, I love it dearly."

Living our lives again—we cannot do, but we can make a brave new start at the beginning of each year. New Year's day is inventory day, when with mental reserve we should take physical, mental and spiritual stock of ourselves. At this time of cataloguing we must not let discouragement nor conceit look over our shoulders and overshadow us, for either brings our balance wrong.



Life's purposes are measured eternally, not by our goal. Our improvement, not our result, marks our progress. The effort put forth in our strivings, measures us quite as much as the things for which we are striving. Success in life must be estimated in this way. Life is an expert bookkeeper; we get back what we put in, our balanced statements show, plus the dividends of loving kindness and true understanding.

Our Cheerful Cherub knew the secret when he said:

One gave his only coat away,
And his heart was like warm gold.
Another drew his fur coat close
But his heart grew still more cold.

"One true measure of success," one modern philosopher said, "is the ratio between what we might have been and what we might have done, on the one hand, and what we are and what we are doing on the other."

Let us watch ourselves throughout the (new) year at our daily work, whatever it be, to see that our initiative does not lose its creative spark, and degenerate into mere routine, for this is the reason why the world is mediocre and gray. Benjamin Franklin advises—"If you have two loaves of bread, one under each arm, sell one and buy a hyacinth for your soul."

In a word, this coming New Year is a chance to begin again. "Expect everything, and some of it will happen."

The New Year Is Here

By Helen Gaisford

TOM MURDOCK was a thief. For a year and a half he had lived well, mingled in good society, and occasionally baffled the police with a "little job."

He wasn't greedy. He took just enough to keep himself in comfort and to permit the privilege of certain charities.

If the bootblack on the corner needed an operation, he might stumble upon a well-filled purse, and how should he know it had been pilfered from some miser's till?

To Tom Murdock the appeal of his profession was not profit but the ever-present danger. He reveled in that.

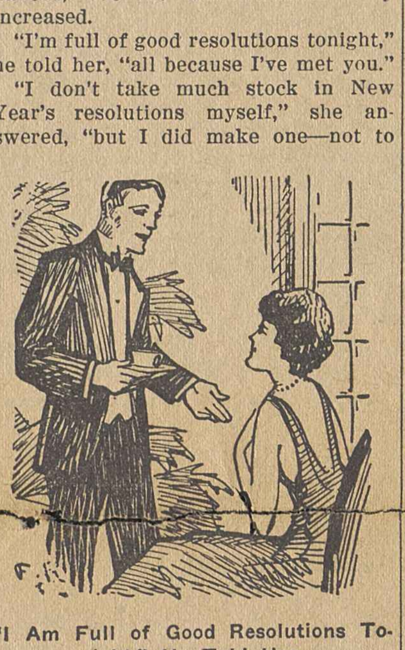
Until the Morrison's New Year's eve ball. He had gone, not to welcome in the New Year, but because of the opportunity the revelry would afford for a rich haul.

It was by merest chance he met the girl. He might have gone on all evening, dancing with fat old dowagers who gratefully called him "a dear boy," and sizing up their jewels at his convenience. But one of these "prospects" introduced him to her niece. "She's been wanting to meet you, dear boy! I've told her all about you, and she says you sound like just the man she's looking for."

He knew, the moment they met, that he belonged to her. And for the first time, he saw himself, not as a clever rogue, but as a criminal, some one she would be ashamed of knowing. They danced, but his dissatisfaction only increased.

"I'm full of good resolutions tonight," he told her, "all because I've met you."

"I don't take much stock in New Year's resolutions myself," she answered, "but I did make one—not to wear many jewels tonight. There have been too many robberies lately."



"I Am Full of Good Resolutions Tonight," He Told Her.

"I don't think you need worry. I'm sure no more will happen."

The hour of midnight found them in the conservatory. "Wait," he pleaded as she started up.

"But shouldn't we join in 'Auld Lang Syne' to see the New Year in?"

"Not this time. This year we're seeing in a whole new life." He held her hand and looked deep into her eyes. "I'm not much of a bargain, but I want you to know that I'm going to make you proud of me. So proud I hope, that you'll marry me. Because I'm in love with you."

"This is so sudden!" she cried, and they both laughed at the trite answer.

"Nonsense!" he insisted. "Why, I met you away back last year." He kissed her and she did not resist.

But later when they returned to the ball room a man stepped up and touched his arm. "Jig's up," the man said quietly. "You're under arrest."

"I? Isn't there some mistake?"

"Not a chance. We've got you with the goods this time. Might as well come quietly."

"Of course. Mind if I say good-by to the lady? I promise I'll come right back. I won't be out of your sight, you know, and you can shoot if I try to get away."

"Here she comes now. Tell her anything you like."

She joined them. "Oh, here you are. I thought you were right behind me. Why, Captain Barry! What's the matter?"

"You know him?" asked Tom in surprise.

"Yes, we're old friends. But why—?"

"My dear, it's going to take longer, maybe a lot longer than I thought. I can't ask you to wait—but may I at least write you now and then?"

"You're going away?" He nodded. "Of course, write to me. Here's my address." She wrote nervously, crumpled the first card, and gave him the second. "I'll write to you, too," she promised. "I—I think I love you, Tom." She turned and fled.

"Well, let's get going." The two men crossed the dance floor, got their wraps, and went out together into the cold night.

"I'd like to ask one favor, captain," Tom said. "Please don't tell her. I couldn't stand for her to know."

"Me tell?" He thought of a crumpled calling card, slipped into his hand, that he had read while putting on his coat. "Don't tell him I was the detective who tipped you off he'd be here tonight."

"Not me," the captain promised. "That's my New Year's resolution."

TURNING A NEW LEAF

By.. KATHERINE EDELMAN

THE glow of soft lamps lent their charm to the living room. Comfort and beauty were two words that symbolized the interior of the Sexton bungalow. Eleanor and Dick, home for the holidays, seemed to be enjoying it all. Eleanor was munching from a box of home-made candy.

"Isn't it nice to be home, Dick?" she murmured. "Mother and dad are precious, making things so comfy."

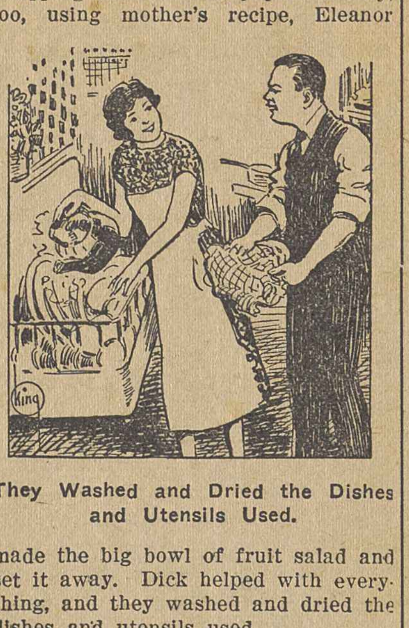
"Yes, they are," Dick answered thoughtfully. "I wonder if we really show our appreciation. By the way, where are they now?"

"Oh, mother is putting the last finishing touches on my dress for tonight. And dad is packing the freezer of cream that he made."

Dick was silent for a moment, then he jumped quickly from his chair. "Do you know, Eleanor, that we're two pretty selfish children?" he cried. "Here we sit around, doing nothing, leaving mother and dad the burden of everything on their shoulders."

Eleanor's face showed concern "You're right, Dick, we really ought to be ashamed. . . But it's not too late to help. Let's surprise them. How about us fixing the sandwiches and salad for the party? Mother planned to do it while we were dressing."

In a minute they were in the clean, white kitchen, taking things from the refrigerator. Very carefully, they fixed the brown and white sandwiches, wrapping them in wax paper. Deftly, too, using mother's recipe, Eleanor made the big bowl of fruit salad and set it away. Dick helped with everything, and they washed and dried the dishes and utensils used.



They Washed and Dried the Dishes and Utensils Used.

Just as they had put things away, mother looked in the door. "Why—what are you doing, children?" she asked wonderingly.

Eleanor rushed over and gave her a big hug. "We've just woke up," she whispered. "Dick and I have been pretty selfish, sitting around while you and dad worked so hard. But we're going to be different from now on—and we're going to have lots of fun, helping you and dad."

"Well, the cream is all set up,' dad said, as he opened the door leading from the basement, "and it's going to be pretty good."

Eleanor rushed to his side and kissed him. "Dad, you've been just a darling," she exclaimed. "Dick and I have just woke up to how much you and mother have been doing for us. And we hereby solemnly declare that we're turning over a new leaf for the New Year."

NEW YEAR BELLS

IN EVERY town and village
The bells do ring,
O'er woods and grass and tillage,
Hey ding a ding,
Ringing for joy to start the week again,
And call all Christian men
To pray and praise and sing.

Then pull your ropes with vigor,
And watch your ways
To thread with strictest rigor
The noisy maze;
Keep in your heart the fire of youth alight,
That he who rings aright
May ring in happy days.

And we who hear the bells ring
With all their might,
As they do say the angels sing
Both day and night,
Praise we the men who built our belfries high
That music from the sky
Might sound for our delight.

A Lucky New Year's Error

By LUELLA B. LYONS

IN ABOUT three hours it would be New Year's eve, but to Eve Blair that meant nothing but heartache, for she was packing to leave Stephen, and was going back to mother. Hadn't Steve said she had mistreated his elderly Aunt Ann, and had been selfish, and a lot of other hastily-said things. Her tears were watering the things she packed, but the phone shrilling out its call, forced her to swallow that ferocious lump in her throat.

"Eve?"

"Yes."

"Listen, here at the New Year's committee headquarters we are swamped with calls for singers. I thought of you, so I wonder if you and Bud won't go out to the Lubberman Home and sing a while for the old folks there. A few old hymns and a few old, sweet ballads, to last from 6:30 to eight bells. Can we depend on you, Eve?"

"You just bet you can. We'll be there," and the phone clicked as the other party hung up the receiver with a thankful sigh. "Must be that Steve offered our services on some other occasion and forgot to tell me about it. Wonder how she knew we used to nickname him Bud? Oh, well, I'll postpone going home to mother till morning; no use in letting these folks down because of our inability to get along." Eve was already digging out Steve's old accordion, her old guitar, some old song books and a hymnal.

It was while Steve and Eve were returning from the old people's home, where they had spent a very happy evening, that Steve fished a letter out of his pocket and held it toward Eve. "Let's burn this old farewell note together when we get home, honey. We can forget and forgive, can't we?"

Eve nodded happily as she snuggled against him as he drove. The trip of cheer had paid many kinds of interest for both the older folks and for Steve and Eve.

"Who could be calling at this time of night?" they wondered as they entered the apartment to hear the phone jangling, demandingly.

"Eve?"

"Yes, of course."

"Well, you see it was this way: I was to call Bud and Eve Blairsend and one of my helpers got you on the phone. It was a coincidence of course, especially after the way you took the request. Just a few minutes ago I discovered the mistake and phoned the Home only to be told that we had better never try to send them any other entertainers but you two, so it seems you made a grand hit with them and are elected for the job again real soon, if you're willing . . ." and on went the effervescing and the explaining.

The little god of peacemaking, his job finished, left the scene content with his day's work. Eve held close in Steve's arms, all thoughts of a separation gone, perhaps, forever.

"THE BELLS of AVALON"

A New Year's Story

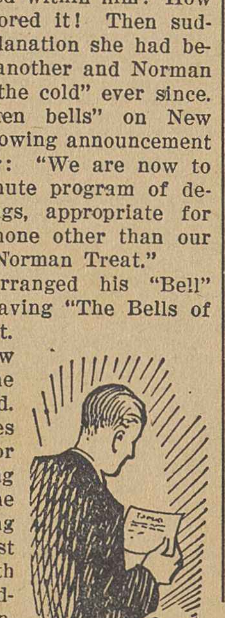
By ALICE B. PALMER

NORMAN TREAT was sorting over his music at the radio station and wondering what he was going to sing on the New Year's program. Boyishly enthusiastic and filled to the brim with the New Year's spirit, he hummed, "The Bells of Avalon," over and over again.

"I have it, Norm! I have it!" shouted his manager. "You're to sing a complete program of 'Bell' lyrics. We ought to be able to hunt them up and go over them in no time. Let's see, there's the 'Bells of St. Mary's,' a beautiful song, then there's the good old-fashioned 'Blue Bells of Scotland.' And oh, yes, the best of all, Norm, 'The Bells of Avalon!' So get busy and practice up, old boy, and be all set for 'ten bells' by the clock, on New Year's eve."

Thus the manager hurried out and on to other worlds to conquer. Norman sat stupefied. He did not mind the old time "Blue Bells of Scotland" or "St. Mary's," both lovely songs, but the "Bells of Avalon"—that was the catch. How could he do it? What if Charlene should hear him? It had been her favorite song and many a time he had sung it to her accompaniment on the piano. "The Bells of Avalon!" What memories that particular piece stirred within him! How they both had adored it! Then suddenly without explanation she had become engaged to another and Norman had been "out in the cold" ever since.

At precisely "ten bells" on New Year's eve the following announcement came over the air: "We are now to hear a fifteen minute program of delightful 'Bell' songs, appropriate for the occasion, by none other than our celebrated tenor, Norman Treat."



Norman had arranged his "Bell" songs in order, leaving "The Bells of Avalon" until last. He did not know why he had done this, but he had. Soon the rich tones of his lovely tenor voice were floating over the air in one glorious "Bell" song after another. Last of all he sang with tender, heart-rending expression, "The Bells of Avalon!" "I wonder if you hear the bells, my dear?" he sang directly to Charlene. Then the deep-toned studio bell accompaniment chimed joyously in a reminder of the midnight hour.

The much enjoyed program was over and Norman heaved a deep sigh of relief. Still filled with the lovely vision and presence of his lost sweetheart, he turned to leave the studio when a telegram was thrust into his trembling hand. He hardly dared open it, but when he did, he read:

"I heard the 'Bells of Avalon,' Norm! Won't you spend New Year's with Charlene?"

THE NEWSBOY'S GREETING

By FRANCES GRINSTEAD

IT WAS a frosty morning in the days of Franklin stoves. The paper carrier, a small boy wrapped in a red and black striped muffler, his nose and eyes showing beneath a cast-off plush cap of his father's, and wearing a nondescript coat once big brother's, slipped in the door of the hardware store with an armful of newspapers. He blew his cold breath in the chill air and held his hands to the rapidly heating stove.

Only then did he muster nerve to fish in the coat pocket hanging near his knees, and to proffer, with the morning paper, a New Year's card elaborately printed in two or three colors of ink, and decorated with a variety of borders, rules and sizes and styles of type.

This he offered shyly, with a retreating motion toward the door. The hardware dealer glanced over his spectacles, looked at the greeting as if surprised, and exclaimed: "Well, well, Henry, but this is nice. Thank you—and here's a dime."

He Glanced Over His Spectacles as If in Surprise.

Each of his customers would express an agreeable surprise and a gratifying knowledge of what was expected, responding with gifts that ranged from the hardware man's dime to the mayor's fifty cents.

Among the samples of work done which printing offices so seldom throw away, there must rest many examples of the carrier boy's card of thirty to fifty years ago. It was a widespread custom.

Under the dusty eaves of one printshop has lain a carrier's card that will soon round out its century of aging yellowness. The 120 lines of the "poem" it bears deal with the fleeting character of Time, present the merits of Henry Clay over William Henry Harrison, and end with this verse:

The Ladies Fair! God bless them all,
Will raise the swelling lay
And help us onward roll the ball—
The ball for Henry Clay.
Thus when you revel in your hall,
Midst mirth and laugh and joy,
At how you nobly "rolled the ball,"
Think of the Carrier Boy.

Shirley Temple At Strand This Week

IN "THE LITTLEST REBEL" A PICTURE OF THE CIVIL WAR DAYS

As the sweetheart of the south—and the darling of the north—Shirley Temple is starred in her first big dramatic role in "The Littlest Rebel," the Fox picture coming to the Strand Theatre Thursday and Friday January 9 and 10.

Much of the pathos and tenderness of the picture centers about Shirley and her mother, Karen Morley, who finally succumbs to the hardships of the war.

There are adventures in her scrapes with the Yankees, and a thrilling flight as Shirley's father, John Boles, atempts to smuggle her through the Yankee lines, only to be captured and held as a spy.

The closing sequences are devoted to showing how this dimpled darling manages to win President Lincoln to her cause and saves her father and the Yankee officer who befriended them.

That lovely song, "If All Thy Endearing Young Charms," is sung by Shirley and John Boles in the picture. Another song, "Polly Wolly Doodle," was especially composed for the little star by B. G. DeSylva, associate producer of the picture, and Sidney Clare.

Direction of the Darryl F. Zanuck picture was done by David Butler, who formerly directed "Bright Eyes." Prominent in the supporting cast of "The Littlest Rebel" are Guinn Williams, Willie Best and Frank McGlynn, Sr., who plays the role of Lincoln.

Goals I Would Like For My Family To Attain

I would like for all my family members to be well educated, in school training, home training, and well trained in spiritual ideals. I want my family to be lovable and understanding and respect eacs member's feelings and rights. I want all of us to cooperate and make our work lighter and easy, our happiness greater. I want us to love each other and our home so well that we will enjoy being at home together as well as in another group. To do this we must have some suitable recreation blended in with our daily routine of home life. I would like for all my family members to be interested in each one's work and help them so that in the end we will be successful family members and have an ideal home for others to use as an example.

Joe Penner Next Monday-Tuesday

"COLLEGIATE" WILL BE SHOWN AT THE STRAND THEATRE

It is only fitting that Susabella should be told about Joe Penner's last day on the "Collegiate" set at Paramount, because Susabella has been Joe's loved one for a long time.

In the past Joe has been known for such lines as "Wanna buy a doik?" and "Woe is me!" But in "Collegiate," whiih opens Monday and Tuesday, January 13 and 14 at the Strand Theatre, he abandons these phrases in favor of a new one. At the least provocation, in his new picture Joe yells "Policeman!"

Now, be it known that the new picture has some 150 chorus beauties for decoration. And Joe's troubles arrived just as he finished the last shot of the picture with Jack Oakie, Frances Langford and Ned Sparks.

More than 100 of the girls came rushing toward the cigar-smoking comedian. He started picking them up and laying them down as rapidly as he knew how, earnestly reverting to character and screaming, "Policeman! Policeman!"

It appeared for a moment that Penner would escape the clutches of the Amazonian avalanche. But just at that moment he tripped over an electric cable, sprawled on the studio floor, and 100 beauteous young ladies landed on him.

They mauled him, ruffed his hair and planted about 200 kisses all over his face. And for Susabella's information, witnesses testify that Joe's shouts for a policeman became fairly feeble and half-hearted after a while.

The burst of mass attention, however, proved more than discomforting for Joe. He was taken to the studio hospital and treated for various cuts, bruises, contusions, abrasions, a twisted ankle and shock.

Negro Attempted To Rob Palace Station

Early Tuesday night, just a few minutes after the Palace Service Station had closed, Mr. R. E. Whaley went out in front of his furniture store to size up a guess on the weather. He happened to notice a negro inside the Service Station, and knowing that Floyd and Inzer had already closed up, he proceeded to get hold of the negro.

But his captive got away, not without being recognized, however. Mr. Whaley summoned Mr. Reid, the filling station proprietor, who then put the case in charge of night policeman, Day.

Mr. Day went to the home of the negro, Thomas Prentice, near the filling station, and Thomas was in bed. He was brought out by the officer and was identified by Mr. Whaley. Sheriff Fore happened to be in town at the time, and he carried Prentice to jail in Columbiana.

The negro had been helping around the station for a while before closing. He heard Mr. Reid tell Floyd something about putting away some money, and evidently he unlatched a window so he might get in later and try to find the money.

Miss Sara Lou Locke of Birmingham spent several days last week with Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Brown.

Mrs. Ada Unaphary and Miss Mae Hilliard of Birmingham were the week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Day.

ALABAMA ROAD PROGRAM 1936

INCREASE OF 90 PER CENT OVER FUNDS AVAILABLE IN THE STATE LAST YEAR

Montgomery, Ala. — Plans for an ambitious $26,800,000 highway construction program for 1936 were revealed recently by Gaston Scott, state highway director, with its success hinging on federal approval of applications.

The program represents estimated expenditures of federal, state and county governments in Alabama, and will show an increase of 90 per cent over the $14,000,000 program of 1935 if carried out.

Although termed the "1936" program under Highway Department plans, $3,258,814 in projects already are under way. In addition, contracts have been awarded on $404,552 in projects, but work has not started; bids have been received but no contracts awarded on $3,110,518; and bids have been asked but not yet received on $408,000.

Scott said that among the items in the 1936 program would be $2,000,000 in grading and draining, and $22,000,000 in construction of bases and surfaces.

The state now has 91.4 miles of paving under construction, as part of the federal emergency program, which is giving employment to 1,343 workers, or a total of 2,493 persons employed.

The state's "three-way" program, jointly financed by the federal government, state and counties, now has 418.5 miles of highway construction work under way, largely on secondary or "feeder" roads that connect with the chief trunk highways.

This program estimated to cost $2,720,437, is giving employment to 1,493 persons from relief rolls, and 640 non-relief workers, or a total of 2,133.

The program, combined with the state's federal emergency highway construction program, shows 4,626 persons at work on Alabama highways exclusive of state maintenance crews.

WPA headquarters announced that the ultimate goal of its "three-way" program was 1,470 miles of highways at an estimated construction cost of $11,700,000 if funds and labor were made available.

In addition to its construction and paving program, the state now has an $8,317,732 grade-crossing program under way financed by federal funds under the $4,000,000,000 works relief fund.

The grade crossing are chiefly overpasses, removing the danger of train-automobile collisions where the state's highways and railroad tracks meet.

Mrs. Zettie Fulford and children, Clifford and Alice Nell, have returned after visiting in Georgiana.

Mrs. Woods has returned after visiting friends and relatives in Birmingham last week.

THE AAA DECISION

The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States Monday in declaring the government's Agricultural Adjustment Administration plan unconstitutional is rightly regarded generally as the most momentous decision handed down by the Court in many years.

Naturally, there are people who rejoice at the step that scraps the AAA. Likewise, there are those who feel that such a step takes us a great way backward in the agricultural stability of our country.

Without attempting to argue the question, it must be admitted that the dismantling of the government's farm program will create a most aggravating period of uncertainty in the business of the country.

If the business of our country has made any progress away from the depression, and we think it has, it seems a matter of certainty that the now impending problem of doing away with AAA and finding something else to take its place, will set us back to a degree which no one can fairly calculate.

But, the verdict of the Supreme Court is over and above all else in the government of our country. If we are and have been doing something which that body says is not authorized by the Constitution, we have but one alternative—to quit it and try something else, no matter how bad it hurts.

With the effort that has been made by the present administration at Washington to help the agricultural interests through the AAA, it is almost heart-breaking to have the Supreme Court throw the whole thing in the scrap pile.

An exhibition of the work of the American Photography Club of Ellensburg, Washington, is now at the Alabama College, under the auspices of the Art Department here. It was brought from Seattle by Glenn Hogue, head of the art department in State Teachers College at Ellensburg, in which position he succeeded Miss Dawn Kennedy, the present professor of art at Alabama College. The exhibition will be sent next to New York, its presentation there being sponsored by the art club of State Teachers College of Columbia University.

THE BIG SHOW

We are almost ready to witness what Grover Hall, of The Montgomery Advertiser, terms the greatest show on earth—A presidential campaign in these United States of ours. And it appears more and more, the closer we get to the "big tent" that the show of 1936 will be the greatest one we have ever seen.

In his address to Congress last week President Roosevelt flung everything he could get his hands on at his critics and opponents, and withal, flung himself right into the middle of the big show as a candidate for President.

The opposition to the President has countered with replies, criticisms, plans, everything but the name of a candidate to oppose Roosevelt.

Now comes, too, the decision of the Supreme Court, scrapping the AAA, and that will have its place for much discussion as another one of the Roosevelt programs tried and abandoned.

Yes, it will be a great show this year. We agree with The Advertiser, the greatest show on earth.

PLANTING OYSTERS

Equipped with expert government advice on where and when to plant oysters, agents of the Alabama Oyster Commission launched the $110,000 WPA oyster rehabilitation project in Mobile and Baldwin county waters in late December.

A detailed chart of the shoals and reefs in the waters of both counties best suited for growing oysters was prepared for the use of the commission by James Bennett Engle of the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries, who spent the greater part of December engaged in this survey work.

The project was first launched near Bon Secour, in Baldwin County, with a small crew of five men planting shells from the raw houses at the mouth of Bon Secour Bay. Similar operations began on the Mobile County side on December 23, with 100 to 200 barrels being planted daily from the raw houses at Bon Secour, Mobile, Coden and Bayou LaBatre.

This project calls for the planting of shells, with small oysters of no market value attached. Another project, which got underway simultaneously, calls for the planting of shells from the local factories and of seed oysters taken from the shoals between Cedar Point and Little Dauphin Island.

The factories are expected to furnish at least 32,000 barrels of shells which will serve as a "stiffening" for soft bottom beds. More than 100,000 barrels of seed oysters will be replanted on more suitable oyster bottoms. Twenty men will be employed in planting the shells and an equal number in tonging and replanting the seed oysters.

Supervision of the project will be handled by A. J. Bride of Coden, chief enforcement officer for the commission, and its crew of inspectors. The men will be permitted to work only 70 hours every two weeks, or about 17 days per month.

Mr. Bride reported that taxes were collected during November on 6,941 barrels of oysters and on 2,787 barrels of shrimp and predicted, as the coast factories began their pack the first of the year, a profitable season for the Alabama seafood industry.

TO TAKE MYSTERY OUT OF BANKING

By ROBERT V. FLEMING,
President American Bankers Association

R. V. FLEMING

The American Bankers Association has cooperated wherever it could properly do so in every measure for national recovery. It has offered constructive recommendations for such changes in banking laws as we recognized were necessary, and we now have a better law under which to operate. The Banking Act of 1935 affords us opportunities for broader service and, at the same time, retains the fundamentals which we believe are so vital to our national welfare and which have played a large part in bringing our country, in a comparatively short space of time, to the position of the greatest industrial nation on the earth.

The Public and Banking

It is necessary that the public have a thorough understanding of the functions of banks, what they can do and what they cannot do, for it must be recognized that to many people the business of banking is still somewhat of a mystery.

We should frankly explain these functions to the public, acquaint them with the laws under which we operate and emphasize the vital part which banks play in the economic life of the Nation. Therefore, in order that there may be the fullest cooperation and understanding between the banks and the people of the country, it will also be one of our objectives to take the mystery out of banking wherever it exists in the public mind.

Banking Conferences

A series of Regional Conferences on Banking Service will be held in strategic sections of the country, embracing all types of banking. The new banking laws and the regulations issued thereunder will be carefully analyzed so that our bankers will have a thorough understanding of the broadened services now made possible.

The question of public relations and how we can best serve the people of our communities will be another topic of discussion. Clinics or forums on specific questions of interest to bankers and the problems confronting them in their particular localities will also be included in these conferences.

PUBLIC ATTITUDE HELPS THE BANKS

Annual Bankers Convention Says People Have Had Confidence Restored—Recommends Changed Government Policy

The restoration of public confidence in banking has put it in the position where it can function fully and vigorously in playing its full economic part in the progress of recovery, said the American Bankers Association in its annual convention resolutions.

"The passage of a generally constructive banking law in the Banking Act of 1935 has stabilized the banking situation and enabled bankers to devote undivided attention to the normal administration of their institutions in promoting the business and public welfare of their communities," the resolutions said.

"We feel that it is a particularly important feature of this law that it aims to create through the revision of the Federal Reserve Board a Supreme Court of Finance which, with the nonpolitical appointment of exceptionally competent men, should constitute one of the greatest forward steps in building a sound banking and credit system for this country."

The Government in Banking

Another resolution said:

"We particularly emphasize the desirability of the retirement of government from those fields of extending credits of various types which can be adequately served by privately owned institutions. We recognize that the exigencies of the now passing depression made necessary a large participation by government for a time in the task of meeting the public's emergency financial needs.

"Those conditions have been largely remedied and the obligation now rests upon the banks and other financial agencies to demonstrate to the people of this country that they are fully able and willing to meet all demands upon them for sound credit cooperation. It is our duty as bankers to facilitate in every effective way the retirement of government agencies from credit activities by promoting public understanding of the proper function of privately owned banking."

ACCURATE RECORDS

The keeping of accurate records constitutes an essential part of any successful business management, whether manufacturing, merchandising or farming. It is quite generally conceded that any good business concern keeps adequate records, and this procedure is equally important in the business of farming, declares the Bulletin of the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission.

HOCKEY TEAM TO BE HERE

The Southern Touring Hockey team will spend several days on the campus of Alabama College beginning on February 28, according to announcement of Miss Alfreda Mosscrop, of the Physical Education Department. Four members of the squad are 1935 All-American players and the others have been outstanding on sectional teams. Miss Gertrude Hooper, of Boston, is president of the United States Field Hockey Association and is a member of this team.

Fifteen games are included in the tour, which will begin February 1 in Philadelphia. The visiting players will coach the Alabama College varsity a day and then play against it.

Mrs. Ida C. Woolley and Miss Mary Woolley left Saturday morning for their home in Mobile after spending the holidays with the family of Mr. and Mrs. Reece Woolley.

TVA EXAMINATIONS

An open competitive examination is announced for positions as skilled workmen (all trades) helpers (all trades) and unskilled workmen at or in the vicinity of Guntersville, Chickamauga and Fowler's Bend Dams.

Receipt of applications will close January 25. Applications must be made on the prescribed form, which may be obtained from the Postmaster at Montevallo.

It Has Helped Others. Let It Help You

Mr. W. B. Hogg, aged 82, of Tuscaloosa, Ala., says, "For years I have been suffering from a bad case of indigestion and stomach trouble. I was weak and in a very nervous and run-down condition. I could not eat and digest hardly anything. Everything I did eat would sour and ferment and cause gas to form. I was continually losing in weight and strength and was beginning to think that I would never see a well day again, when a friend suggested that I try the V-T Treatment. I have been taking the V-T Treatment only 30 days and I no longer suffer from indigestion or stomach trouble, feel as good as I did in my early fifties and eat and digest anything that I want. I shall always continue to praise the V-T Treatment and will recommend it wherever I go."

HE might HAVE BEEN A G·REAT BUILDER. . . .

BUILDING BLOCKS fascinated John as a little fellow. He would spend long hours with them on the floor. "I am going to build tall buildings when I am grown," he often declared. His parents felt certain he would.

But one day, when he had grown to young manhood, he learned the saddening truth. His health had failed. He could no longer continue his engineering course at college. Eye-strain was a contributing cause.

Today John has a job. He makes a "living." But the tall buildings are being built by someone else!

This story may have had a happier ending—if John's parents had realized the dangers of eye-strain; and guarded against it with proper lighting.

Dallas, Texas.—In 1936 the State of Texas will celebrate the passage of a century since her pioneer settlers won freedom from Mexican rule and established the Republic of Texas, which later became a state.

Throughout the Lone Star State there will be celebrations at places of historic and patriotic interest. The cities and towns which were battle scenes in the Texas Revolution, and communities founded during the exploration and colonization preceding the Republic, will commemorate progress of the only state that existed as an independent republic, prior to its entrance to the Union.

Under the six flags that have flown over Texas soil—those of France, Spain, Mexico, Republic of Texas, the Confederacy and the United States—since 1519, there has been written by men and women, in thought and action, a saga that is truly mighty.

Highlights of the gala and festive celebrations of the Centennial Year will be an event that is in its own right an historic one. It is the Texas Centennial Exposition to open in Dallas on June 6 and continue until November 29.

The Texas celebration represents an investment of more than $20,000,000. The City of Dallas pledged $8,000,000 in cash and property and the $4,000,000 plant of the State Fair of Texas, located within her city limits, will be used as the Exposition grounds. Dallas also pledged $5,500,000 in cash for building her share of the enterprise, $3,500,000 of which was raised by a municipal bond issue and $2,000,000 bonds sold by the Texas Centennial Central Exposition Corporation, comprised of Dallas citizens.

The Texas Legislature appropriated $3,000,000 and the United States Government a like sum.

Texas Hall of State, $1,200,000; Hall of Fine Arts, $550,000; Hall of Varied Industries, Electricity and Communications, $440,000; Hall of Transportation, $440,000; Hall of Livestock and Animal Husbandry, $300,000; United States Building, $325,000.

Hall of Natural History, $250,000; Rural Boys' and Girls' Dormitory, $250,000; Hall of Foods and Beverages, $230,000; Hall of Aquatic Life, $180,000; Hall of Agriculture, $170,000; Hall of Domestic Arts, $75,000; Hall of Horticulture, $75,000.

Band Shell and Pavilion, $50,000; Hall of Negro Life and Culture, $50,000; Radio, Police, Fire Station, Texas Ranger Headquarters and Hospital, $40,000.

Cost of landscaping and paving is estimated at $675,000. In addition, a half-million dollars worth of utility equipment and $350,000 in electrical equipment will be installed.

A million dollar sports plant will enable the Exposition to handle sporting events of all kinds. The grounds already have a $400,000 stadium seating 46,000 people, a horse race track and grandstand costing $300,000, and indoor boxing and wrestling arena costing $100,000 and seating 6,000 persons, a polo field, straightaway and oval running tracks and tracks suitable for automobile or motorcycle races. A standard-sized swimming pool will be constructed for aquatic events.

Main entrance of the Exposition grounds will face the Esplanade of State, 300x1,000 feet, leading to the Texas Hall of State. The esplanade's center will be a reflecting basin 200x700 feet with concealed lighting effects flashing from the pool to adjacent buildings.

The Texas Hall of State, built of native granite, will be 488x258 feet. An 80-foot high center will house the Niche of Heroes, dedicated to illustrious figures of Texas history. The front wings will be devoted to regional rooms, a replica of a Texas mission representing the Hall of 1936. An auditorium in the basement will be used for convention purposes.

CIVIC CLUB NOTES

Beginning this week the Civic Club will hold its regular meetings at the Baptist Church, the luncheons being served by the ladies of the church.

Presiding at the first meeting of the club since his election as President, Dr. F. B. Pearson, at the meeting Wednesday, announced the appointment of the following standing committees:

Program—Dr. M. L. Orr, W. M. Wyatt and Mr. H. D. LeBaron; Stunts—S. M. Mahan, Lucien Giddens, T. E. Watson; Membership and Attendance—Rev. A. J. Cox, C. H. Mahaffey, Robert Holcombe, L. D. Gilbert, Ike Nathews; Roads—Dr. J. I. Reid, Dr. J. Alex Moore, Dr. A. F. Harman.

Dr. H. W. James reported that the committee designated to serve with the American Legion Auxiliary committee for the distribution of Christmas favors to underprivileged children, had carried out the schedule formerly outlined, giving away upwards of a hundred Christmas packages.

Report was made by Mr. J. Alex Moore that the government's check for purchase of the postoffice lot in Montevallo is already issued, and will be delivered to Mr. Cox as soon as the deeds are signed. The papers for final execution of the deal will be here this week, he said.

Mr. Moore also told of a conversation with Governor Graves, in which the chief executive assured him that the road from Montevallo to Calera will be paved.

Miss Pruitt, of Columbiana, director of the Board of Welfare for Shelby County, was a guest of the Club, and spoke upon the various phases of the present welfare program. The history of welfare legislation in Alabama was given by the speaker, after which she went into the many details of the local program as being applied in Shelby County.

Finances for carrying on the welfare work, Miss Pruitt explained, come from participation by the county, the State, and the federal government; the part of the latter being provided through the social security law which went into effect the first of this year.

It will be proposed, Miss Pruitt stated, to provide Shelby County's money for participation in the welfare program out of the levy of a special county gasoline tax of one cent per gallon. Copies of a bill to be introduced in the legislature, providing for this were distributed by Miss Pruitt.

According to the copies given out, the proposed Bill provides that the Board of Revenue for Shelby County, may, for the purpose of construction and maintenance of public roads, bridges, and for the improvement and upkeep of the county courthouse, and for the expense and maintenance of a public welfare unit for said county, impose a tax on gasoline not to exceed one cent a gallon.

For the purpose of assisting in the work of the welfare unit, the Civic Club voted to authorize a special committee to consider the matter with Miss Pruitt. The committee held a meeting immediately after the club luncheon. The committee was composed of Dr. A. W. Vaughan, Dr. T. H. Napier and Mr. Z. S. Cowart.

Miss Pruitt mentioned in her talk that the county may find some more economical and satisfactory way to care for those now in the alms house, thereby making available additional funds for the welfare program.

The County Welfare Unit is not a relief plan, she said. It has more permanent objectives than mere temporaryr relief. It involves regula help to both old and young indigents.

Ford Announces $25.00 Monthly Purchase Plan

Dearborn, Mich., January 3.—A new "25-a-month" plan for financing retail purchases of new Ford V-8 cars is to be put into effect immediately throughout the United States, Edsel Ford, president of the Ford Motor Company, announced here today.

The plan, involving substantially reduced finance charges and broad insurance protection for the car purchaser, is to be offered through Ford dealers by the Universal Credit Company, authorized Ford finane company.

The plan has three important features:

1. Maximum monthly payments of $25, plus the usual low down payment.
2. Finance charges at the rate of one-half of one per cent per month (6 per cent for 12 months,) computed upon the total of the original unpaid balance plus insurance cost.
3. Insurance protection at regular Conference rates, including not only fire and theft coverage, but also $50 deductible collision insurance and protection against other accidental physical damage to the car.

The number of monthly payments may be reduced, or monthly payments less than $25 may be arranged, if a larger down payment is made or if a late model car, valued at more than the usual down payment, is turned in for exchange. The account also may be discharged at any time by full payment of the balance due, in which event a rebate of a portion of the credit charge will be allowed.

Representative Reid Writes About Special Session of the Legislature

Editor Montevallo Times:

Please grant me space in your valuable and influential paper to say a few words to the citizens of Shelby County relative to the approaching special session of the Alabama Legislature. At this special session questions of very grave importance and interest to every citizen in this county will be considered. We are faced at this time with the problem of providing necessary funds to keep our schools open, to care for welfare work, and to take care of old age pensions. In addition to this we must have money to take care of health work along with our farm and home demonstration work. All of these aforementioned agencies are now functioning, and it shall be my purpose to support such legislative measures in the coming special session as will provide adequate means to insure their continuing to function.

As to the plan or plans which will enable these necessary departments to continue to serve the people of the county and state there are varied ideas and opinions. It is my sincere desire to support only such measures as are entirely fair to all the people of our county and state, and I shall welcome and appreciate any constructive suggestions from the people whom I have the honor to represent, that will better assist me in arriving at a fair decision in these important matters.

I wish to make it clear that I have no political ambitions and will not be influenced by what may be the popular thing to do from a political point of view. I wish this understood, because of the many letters I have received in which I have been advised to do this or that if I ever expected to be again elected to office in Shelby County.

I am convinced that Alabama's schools must not close; that such agencies as health, farm and home demonstration units, feeding the hungry and clothing the naked are vastly more important than the political future or aspirations of any office-holder, and I pledge you here and now that politics shall be completely and entirely dismissed from my mind and actions until these important matters which so vitally affect the people of our county are settled.

I shall appreciate letters from any citizens of Shelby County in regard to these important matters, and I shall be most happy at any time to be of service to you.—Sincerely, R. A. Reid, Montevallo, Ala.

Relief Payment Records To Be Kept As History

Montgomery, Ala. — The auditing and indexing of more than 12,000,000 checks issued by the Alabama Relief Administration to show expenditure of every dime received by the state agency for relief and materials will be completed in a few days. Thad Holt, director, announced following the dissolution of the ARA.

Once the auditing and indexing is completed the checks will be filed in a specially constructed compartment at the state capitol, there to remain as a record of one of the most distressing periods in the state's history.

They will show that at one time, in April 1933, more than one-fourth of the population of the state, or a total of 751,925 persons, were directly dependent upon Federal aid for the necessities of life.

They will show that for all forms of relief, from the days of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation dole in 1932 through the Civil Works Administration and for the duration of the relief program, a total of $71,126,561.34 was received from the federal government and disbursed by these agencies.

For the state, the peak relief load was in April, 1933, when 150,385 families were enrolled. In Shelby County the load for the peak month was 2,071 families. The average relief per family at one time was less than $5 a month, finally rising later to a little over $15 a month.

Mrs. R. A. Reid, Mrs. Fred Frost and Mrs. Edwin Allen attended the executive board meeting of the Shelby Associational W. M. U. at the home of Mrs. D. Z. Wooley in Columbiana last Tuesday.

Inter-High School Meet To Be Here April 2-4

He will be assisted in the arrangements by the following other faculty members: Dr. M. L. Orr, Miss Alfreda Mosscrop, Miss Elsa Schneider, Dr. Lois A. Ackerley, Mr. H. D. LeBaron and Miss Ellen Haven Gould.

The college takes care of the board and lodging of contestants and official chaperones.

The final date for filing applications is March 25. There are twelve contests in home economics which may be entered either in person or by exhibit. The athletic contests are held under the Alabama High School Athletic Association in the form of an official Play Day with varied forms of competition and recreation. The winners in the music competitions in piano, voice, violin and organ are each awarded $50 scholarships at the college. The speech phase of the meet includes poetry, prose, story telling, debate and plays.

The meet coincides in time with the Spring holidays at Alabama College, thus allowing visitors use of the dormitories and other campus facilities. For Play Day Membership in the State High School Athletic Association is required, but any high school in the state is eligible to enter the other sections.

SNOWBALL

Mr. Jack Burleson, engineer on the Shoal Creek Bridge, reports that upon arrival at the job Wednesday morning he found that the crew were downcast in spirits and showed evidences of being in very great sorrow.

Inquiry revealed that a tragedy had happened. When asked by Mr. Burleson for an explanation, Mr. Rowe and Mr. Malcolm are reported to have shed tears copiously.

Mr. Burleson said he thought surely such grief could have been caused only by some fatal disaster to the foreman or some member of the crew.

Collecting his nerves as best he could, and between fits of bitter sobbing, Mr. Rowe directed Mr. Burleson to a portion of the wooden superstructure, and pointed to the victim as he turned his moist eyes in the other direction.

It was the limp cold body of "Snowball," mascot of the crew. A tear crept down the cheek of the engineer.

"Snowball," the little white dog belonging to Mr. Mack Dennis, has been one of the most faithful attendants upon the construction of the bridge. He was run over by an automobile.

RAISING CHICKENS FOR PROFIT

This fall we learned in occupational studies class about how chickens can be raised at homes for profit, and I became interested in helping my brother in taking care of a flock at our home.

On the 8th of October he bought 200 baby chicks, which cost $15.00. I found it quite interesting to help water and feed the chicks and get green oats for them. We ground the oats in an old food chopper and fed it to the chicks once a day.

It was fun to watch all the chicks crowd around the brooder at night and finally nestle down to sleep in the straw.

The week before Christmas we sold about 20 for $5.64, on January 9th we sold 55 for $25.00; until that time 4 sacks of feed at $2.55 a sack had been bought, and 16 bushels of home grown corn, valued to $1.00 per bushel, had been fed to them.

Of the 200 chickens only 10 were lost and we still have 100 pullets for spring layers, besides a few culls we intend to sell.

This summer we plan to make the shed of the barn into a laying house by stretching wire across the sides and front, so that the hens can get sunshine.

Raising chickens, we have found, is pleasant and profitable work. — Pauline Beane. Jr. II

PRUNE AND SPRAY

The Following valuable information is given out by Mr. A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent of Shelby County:

To produce fruit for home use or for market it is necessary to have good healthy trees and then protect the fruit from insects and disease.

At this season all orchards should be properly pruned. The Alabama Home Orchard bulletin tells in detail how this should be done; this bulletin may be secured at the county agent's office.

After pruning and getting out the surplus wood, the trees should have a dormant spray, which should be a commercial oil spray, primarily to control San Jose scale. In using this material directions should be followed closely; the company selling the oil furnish directions.. This spray is to protect the tree.

The summer sprays are for the protection of the fruit from insects and disease, and the scedule should be followed closely to insure a good quality of fruit.

Proper care of the trees and fruit will give you good fruit for home use and any surplus of good quality can be sold to advantage.

If I can be of any service in pruning, spraying, fertilizing or cultivating your orchard, call on me.

Board sessions, which have extended over the past two weeks, ended Saturday.

The building, which will house old people at the home, is to be known as the "Dora Alexander Talley" building, in honor of Dora Alexander Talley, Woodmen Circle national president. Since that time a second bulding, the Pennsylvania Building, has been erected. Forty-five children and seventeen old people are cared for there at the present time.

WOULD PROTECT BANKING FIELD IN RURAL AREAS

American Bankers Association Announces Purpose to Combat Return of Excessive Number of Banks

CITES LAX CHARTER POLICIES IN THE PAST

Finds a Chief Cause of Bank Failures Was Too Many Banks—Existing Sound Banks Serving Communities Well

NEW YORK. — Existing sound banks, especially the small banks in the rural districts which are serving their communities well, should be protected from any return of the over-banked local conditions caused by former lax chartering policies, which were mainly to blame for the unfavorable failure record of the past, says the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association. This is brought out in a report covering an investigation by the commission of bank failures and public policies in chartering banks.

"The Commission's study gives an impressive revelation of how great a part mistaken public policies in the chartering of banks played in creating the unsound banking structure which finally collapsed with the Bank Holiday in March 1933," Robert V. Fleming, president of the association, says in a foreword.

"Over-production of banks, literally by thousands, over many years in the face of insistent warnings not only from bankers and others who recognized the danger, but even more so from the mounting records of bank failures themselves, is clearly shown to have constituted as a whole one of the greatest single economic errors in the history of the Nation."

A Recurrence Feared

He refers to fears of a recurrence of over-banking recently expressed by Federal banking authorities, to the powers given the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation by the provision of the Banking Act of 1935 over the admission of banks to membership in the insurance fund, to strengthened state laws and to the policies now being followed by both national and state supervisory authorities aimed to safeguard the nation against over-banking.

"But sound laws and conscientious officials are not of themselves always sufficient safeguard in any field of our complex national life unless they have the active support of public opinion," he adds. "It is the purpose of the American Bankers Association to aid in marshaling public opinion in support of both national and state supervisory authorities in their efforts to strengthen and protect the banking structure."

The Economic Policy Commission summarizes its findings in part as follows:

"The facts show a distinct causal relationship between the over-chartering of banks and the abnormal bank failure conditions that prevailed from 1920 to the bank holiday in 1933. It is desirable that studies be made on the basis of experience to develop standards governing the number of banks or the volume of bank capital which can be successfully operated.

"Such a study would embrace the question whether banking facilities can best be supplied to the rural districts by small unit banks or by branches from banks of substantial capital in larger centers. Existing sound banks, which are serving their communities well should be protected from any return of the over-banked local conditions caused in the past by lax chartering policies.

Banking Officials Queried

"An inquiry among state bank commissioners shows a preponderant opinion against increasing materially the number of banks, coupled with the fact that present laws give them sufficient discretion to prevent a repetition of the grave errors of the past.

"Under prevailing abnormal conditions, with the Federal Government extensively exercising loaning powers in competition with the banks, and with industry itself so largely supplied with funds as to render it to a great degree independent of normal bank borrowing, the banking structure even with its present reduced numbers, finds it difficult to support its existing capital investment and operating personnel.

"These are new factors, intensifying the need for highly prudent and restrictive chartering policies. We urge the retirement of the Federal Government from the banking business as rapidly as the return of normal business conditions warrant."

School Banking

At Montevallo High School

Prof. W. F. Tidwell, principal of Montevallo High School, announces plans to inaugurate a school banking system at that institution. This is a most commendable forward step by the school administration, in an effort to teach the high school students the very important habit of saving their money.

In the list of questions and answers submitted by Mr. Tidwell in explanation of the operaton of the plan we are specially impressed by this one:

Why should a child learn to save money? Ans.—A child learns the value of money through the use of it. When money is carelessly spent by a child, wasteful habits develop which cling throughout life. A savings account teaches him to consider whether the desired trifle at hand is of more value than the money saved. Thoughtful savings habits make successful men and women.

We reproduce below the list of questions and answers given us by Mr. Tidwell, which fully explains the system to be carried out in the high school:

1. Who may open school savings accounts? Any pupil in the Montevallo High School.
2. What bank acts as sponsor and depository for school savings? The Merchants & Planters Bank, of Montevallo.
3. What amount of money opens an account? Five cents. A pass-book is issued with the first deposit.
4. When are deposits made? Once each week on banking day.
5. How are the accounts handled in the school? On banking day the pupil gives his deposit to two student bankers who receive and record it under the supervision of the teacher.
6. How much time does banking take? Fifteen minutes each week.
7. Is a school savings account interest bearing? Yes, when it reaches $5, interest is credited semi-annually — January and July.
8. Where are the bank books kept? At the school. They may be taken home when requested.
9. Are school savings deposits insured? Yes, the Merchants & Planters Bank is a member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.
10. Are deposits made only at school? Yes.
11. When can money be withdrawn? Any day the depositor wants it.
12. How are withdrawals made? The money is withdrawn by a check signed by the pupil and parent unless the parent has given written permission that the pupil may withdraw money without their signature.
13. Where do students get their banking money? Their parents give it to them, they save it from their allowance, and they earn it by jobs around the home or outside the home.
14. Is the amount of the deposits in school savings important? No. It is the regularity that is emphasized.
15. Why should a child learn to save money? A child learns the value of money through the use of it. When money is carelessly spent by a child, wasteful habits are developed, which cling throughout life. A savings account teaches him to consider whether the desired trifle at hand is of more value than the money saved. Thoughful savings habits make successful men and women.
16. Wht is the advantage of a school savings account? It teaches and encourages the pupil to save systematically some amount of money (little or much) each week.
17. Are school savings deposits made during the summer? Yes, pupils are encouraged to continue their regular deposits during the summer months at the school.

No further word of explanation seems necessary. But we do with to add an expression of hope that the parents of children in the high school will realize the great lesson of helpfulness that may be taught in this effort, and that they will co-operate and support it fully.

School children need to learn many more things than are taught out of text books. We should be glad that Montevallo High School realizes this fact, and has taken up the important subject of thrift and saving as one of the practical every-day problems to teach our children to solve correctly. Let us help them!

Dr. Harman Declares For Parity of Education

Dr. A. F. Harman, president of Alabama College, was the program speaker at Wednesday's meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club. His subject was "Educational Conditions in Alabama — Conditions, Cause and Cure."

It was a most able address typical of the speaker who is one of the soundest-thinking educational leaders of our state.

Most impressive and moving was his bold declaration that the people of Alabama themselves must write into their State Constitution a provision that will place education on a parity with other functions of our government.

This, he rightly said, will not entirely cure our conditions, but it is the first step necessary in the direction of a cure.

Seventy-eight children representing thirty-five families were remembered. Cash donations were received from the following organizations who joined in this work: Montevallo Study Club, the Thanksgiving church offering, Civic Club, the American Legion Post and the Auxiliary poppy fund.

Also under this report, nine Christmas cards were sent to the veterans in hospitals and at home, and their relatives. Two visits were made to sick veterans. Mrs. Frost's membership report was fifteen paid members for this year.

Under new business, a party for the veterans hospital in Tuscaloosa is to be put on January 31, jointly with Columbiana and Roanoke units as co-hostesses was discussed. This unit is to make 150 menu card covers with a motif suitable for Washnigton's birthday. These are to be sent the veterans hospital as a part of the rehabilitation work from the unit.

Two money making projects were discussed: soliciting subscriptions to Holland's magazine and securing new customers for Standard Coffee Company products. The new students can begin work in English, History, Music, Physical Education, Sciences, Home Economics, Art, Psychology, Religious Education, Speech and some courses in Secretarial Science. They may qualify for the Sophomore Class by the 1936-37 session on attendance through the next summer school and be graduated in three and one-half years; or they may attend only in regular sessions and be graduated in January, 1940.

As explained in the College News-Letter, recently released to prospective students: "In providing broad educational opportunities through its instruction and influence, the College at the same time seeks to train for such specialized occupations as teaching, commercial work, library work, secretarial positions, social service, executive positions in department stores and cafeterias, physical education direction, and dietetics. In recent years the majority of graduates have been placed promptly in employment for which they were trained on the campus."

The curricula of the college have been revised within the past three years to enhance the values of courses through their better adaptation to current needs of students and graduates. These changes were based on the desirability of devoting the first two years of college work largely to general or liberal education and the last two to the fields of specilizaton and related fields.

A large number of extra-curricular activities on the campus between January 27 and commencement, June 1, will have immediate appeal to new students in introducing and adjusting them to college life and traditions. College Night, February 21 and 22; Concerts by the Music faculty; Recitals of seniors in Speech and Music; Glee Club concerts by the College club and visiting singers; debates by varsity anl freshman teams; five remaining numbers on the Concert and Lecture Series; many forms of competition and recreation in athletics are pointed out as opportunities into whch new students may enter immediately.

Alabama Coaches Adding New Bus On Line

Alabama Coaches Company, of Montevallo, announce this week that a second bus will be added to their line beginning February the first. Schedules have been revised to provide two round trips each way each day, rendering first-class passenger service between Tuscaloosa and Sylacauga, and serving all intermediate points.

The addition of the second bus to Alabama Coaches Line will make for much improved service to the public in making better connection with other bus lines at Tuscaloosa, Centreville, Calera and Sylacauga.

The new bus to be added February the first is a Ford 20-passenger capacity machine. The bus which has been operated since the line was established is a 16-passenger capacity.

In an advertisement in this issue of The Times, a complete statement of the new schedule is given, showing time of arrival and departure of busses at all points on the line.

SAVING AND WISE SPENDING

Every successful, comfortable and happy man or woman is one who, at the proper time in life, acquired to a reasonable degree the custom of saving money earned or acquired, and the wise spending of the same.

One of the sayings of Poor Richard was: "Take care of the pennies and the dollars will take care of themselves"

I know a certain little boy eight years old whose father, since the boy was a tiny fellow, has given him pennies, nickels and dimes. The father has constantly urged the little fellow to deny himself of frivolous things he might want, and to save his money instead of wasting it.

He has kept it faithfully. As he gets enough small change to make a dollar, he insists that his daddy swap him a paper dollar for the little pieces of money.

A while back, during an illness at Christmas time the boy had somewhat flushed his collections, having found out that he could get paid liberally for taking frequent doses of medicine. He had gathered together a total of one five-dollar bill and more than a dollar in small change. He asked his daddy to carry his money to the bank, and he did — the five-dollar bill and the change too.

Upon the father's return, the boy asked him if he put all the money in the bank.

"I am glad you put the little money in the bank too, Daddy," he said, "because it is a heap harder for me to save the little money than it is the paper money."

This made me think of the saying of Poor Richard.

The boy frequently wants a toy, some candy, or other non-essentials. He will buy them if he can get his mother or daddy to supply the money out of the family budget. He never thinks of such a thing as spending the savings he has in the bank.

All of this is said as preliminary to commending the step that has been taken by the Montevallo High School to institute a school savings and banking system among the students.

There are many things outside of books which the schools may teach. We know of none more important than the principles of thrift that were the guideposts of the life of Benjamin Franklin.

"A CAMPUS CAMP"

Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, Student Counselor at Alabama College, has an article entitled "A Campus Camp" in the national extra-curricular magazine, School Activities, in September, and was reprinted by the Physical Education Digest. Dr. Steckel in this publication discussed the program and service of the camp conducted every summer on the campus of Alabama College and which she directs.

"IF YOU'RE GOING TO DRIVE FAST . . . ."

"The combination of cops, lights, rules, roads, cars, and drivers gives us today a traffic situation that is a national menace and that will get worse instead of better, unless some approach is made to the real key to the problem, and that is the driver and how to drive."

After making that statement, Ray W. Sherman, who has been driving motor vehicles since the get-out-and-get-under days, proceeds, in the 150-page book, "If You're Going to Drive Fast", to tell the driver of the motor vehicle how to drive it safely. The book is published by Thomas Y. Crowell Co., 393 Fourth Avenue, N. Y. $1.

The author contends that highway traffic speeds up with the years, that people will drive fast anyway, that safety can not be regulated into them, and that solution of the safety problem lies in "making good driving something to be proud of, and poor driving something to be ashamed of". He recommends that the reckless driver be jailed and his license revoked, but insists that the standard of recklessness be set up by others than "official racketeers." Finally, he describes how to drive safely at any speed and under any conditions.

Thoughts at Twilight

I wish I could capture with paint and brush,
That multitude of colors, as the sun,
Making its reluctant trek across the sky,
Hesitates at the brink of the horizon—
Soon to leave the world to obscurity
On the spacious canvas of the sky,
Painted with strokes, both deft and bold,
Are a thousand gleaming hues—
Vivid Resplendent,
Clear,
Like a stained-glass window:—
The simplicity and nun-like purity
Of softest grey—restful and soothing
On sharp relief, a glow of golden orange
Floods the west with its warm, bright, gleam
And clouds of pale turquoise, a color
Stolen from the dim, dark, depths
Of the coolest seas, gently swathe
The heavens with their soft blue folds
And over there is a pink-tinged cloud
With all the ethereal quality and Fragile shading of peach blossoms
In the Springtime—
The center of all is the sinking sun
It pauses momentarily for its nocturnal farewell
And glazes all heaven with its lustrous fire
How futile is my attempt to duplicate
The subtle harmony of such technique
Nature's masterpiece,
And the piece de resistance of God;
The master painter.

HOW GASOLINE TAXES CAN BE REDUCED

Gasoline consumption has increased sufficiently in the past two years as to make possible reduction of gasoline tax rates in practically all states by one-fourth to two cents a gallon without decreasing revenue, it is revealed in the reports of a study recently published by the "Oil and Gas Journal."

In Florida, where the state gasoline tax is 7 cents a gallon (the highest state rate in the United States) a five cent rate would produce the same revenue the state obtained in 1933, it is indicated. In Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina, tax rates could be reduced by one and three-quarter cents a gallon without loss in revenue as compared to the 1933 revenue, the report shows.

"In the field of gasoline taxation, revenues have been constantly growing as consumption increased," the report asserts. "While the construction and maintenance of highways have remained practically constant, highway revenues have surpassel the highway needs. It is obvious, therefore, that some effort must be made to adjust revenues to the needs and at the same time to end the nefarious practice of diversion.

"Thus the gasoline tax rate should be adjusted in accordance with anticipated consumption in order that no more revenue than is necessary to carry out a planned program be collected from motorists, America's most overburdened group of taxpayers."

The study discloses that 41 states now have the same gasoline tax rate they had in 1933. It also revealed that the average state gasoline tax today amounts to 4.2 cents a gallon on an average, whereas the average rate needed during 1936 would be only 3.2 cents a gallon to produce the same revenue as was obtained 2 years ago.

The report recommends that each state determine the revenue needed to finance highways during a given period and then to adjust the gasoline tax to a rate which would produce that amount of revenue.

SHE might HAVE BEEN A GREAT WRITER....

EVEN before she learned to read, little Jane "play read" to her playthings. She "wrote" them letters, and stories, and books. She was going to be a great writer, she told everyone, and—why not? As the years slipped by, little Jane became big Jane. She studied. And wrote. And studied. Then one day the skies fell around her. Eye-strain, headaches, a nervous breakdown . . .

True, Jane is still writing—shopping lists, postal cards, now and then a letter. But no reader has even seen a story bearing her name.

How easily the entire course of Jane's life might have been altered by ample lighting for studying and reading! Eye-strain would have had little chance to undermine her nervous system.

TROOP NOTES

Troop One is working on requirements for passing the various tests. The majority of the Girl Scouts in this group are working on second-class requirements. The advance patrol is working toward first-class testing. Some are interested in badge work, as no Girl Scout can secure badges until she is second-class. The local girls haven't done much toward this so far. Nature is th ephase of Scouting that the larger group is working with. Other phases are judging heights, weights, and measures.

Last week this Troop was directed by Frances Lee, lieutenant, in making barometers. Considerable interest was displayed and some of the girls had them ready to detect the stormy weather which we experienced over the past week-end.

Troop Two blazed the trail which leads to Mrs. A. F. Harman's new outdoor stove, always a popular rendezvous for Girl Scouts of Montevallo, and which Mrs. Harman has offered so graciously for their use at any time.

In keeping with the ninth Girl Scout law, "A Girl Scout is thrifty," and also during National Thrift Week, which began with Benjamin Franklin's birthday, January 17, this group of younger Scouts opened a savings account in the bank last week, of funds which they expect to use for a campship for some deserving Girl Scout from the Troop, who will be unable to attend camp next summer other than this award.

Through Mrs. A. W. Vaughan's earnest and perpetual efforts as local commissioner, one other campship has been offered for all Troops, and one other possibly will be offered.

Mrs. R. A. Reid and Mrs. M. P. Jeter spent Friday in Birmingham.

Miss Laura Elliott of the University of Alabama was the week end guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. T. Elliott.

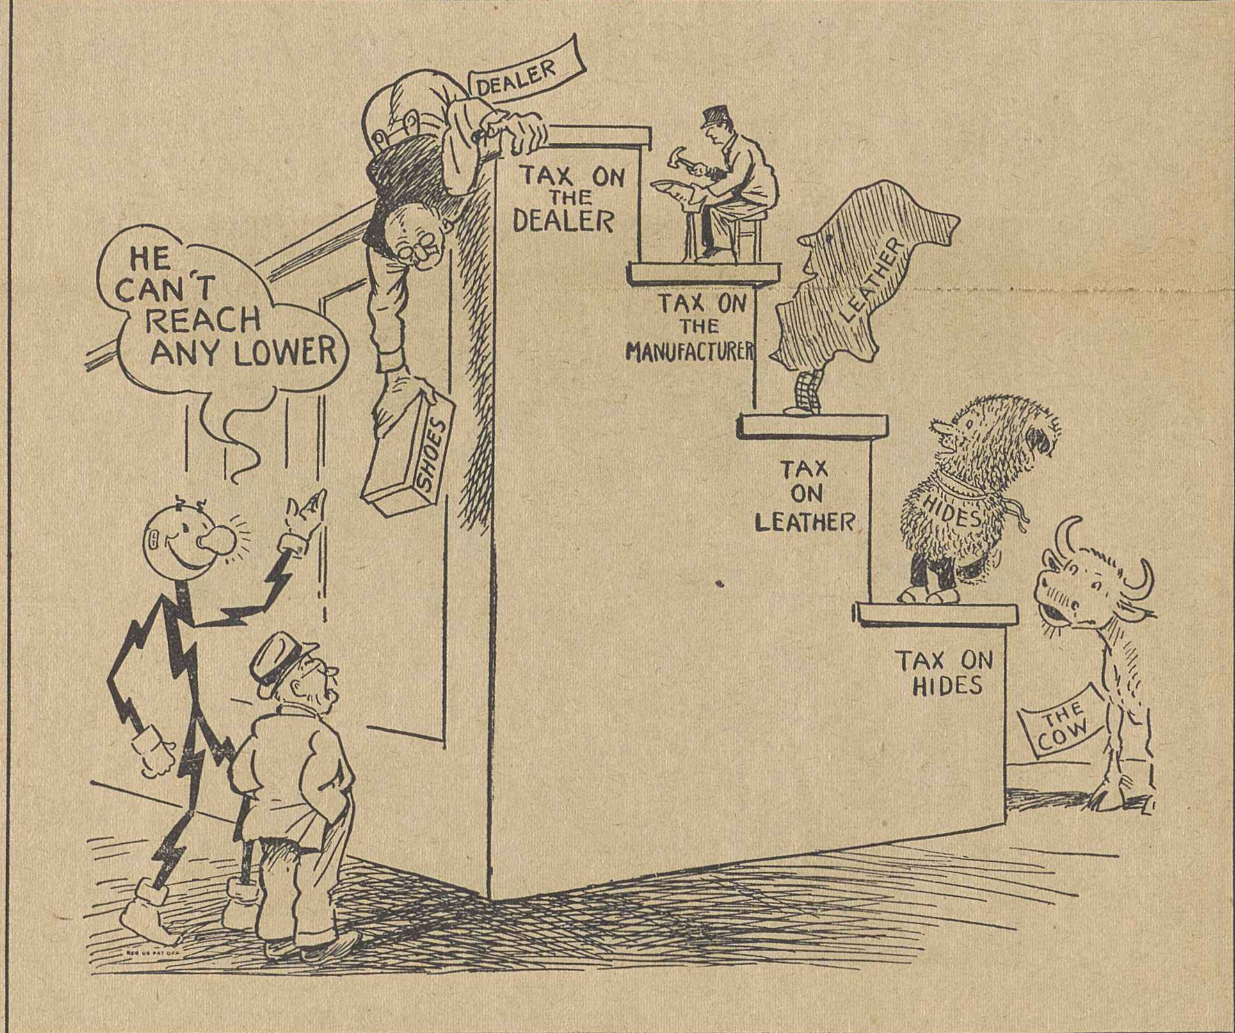
DON'T BLAME THE SHOE MAN



THE minute a hide comes off the back of a cow, it's taxed; when it goes through the tannery, the tanner is taxed; when it goes through the shoe factory, the shoe manufacturer pays still further taxes; when the pair of shoes gets to your local shoe man, he too must pay taxes; when the shoes get onto your feet, you may not be conscious of all these taxes, but you know the price you've paid for the shoes, and after a little thought, you know that much of the price you've paid is because of taxes.

Shoe prices are going up. Your shoe man can't help it. He has no control over the increase of prices brought about by governmental activities and expenditures. He'll have little to say about having to pay his part of the loss occasioned by governmental participation in the electric light and power business at less than cost. The government will have to make up those losses through the collection of taxes which your shoe man, and you, must eventually pay—even though this tax may not be labelled "To pay for losses in operation of governmental electric business."

HOW TO OBTAIN SOLDIER BONUS

AMERICAN LEGION WILL HELP ALL VETERANS IN MAKING THEIR APPICATIONS

Trotter Jones, Department Adjutant, The American Legion of Alabama advises all veterans in Alabama that all Legion posts in Alabama have been requested to keep open headquarters where veterans may obtain free and accurate advice on how to fill out bonus applications.

The Legion realizes that there will be many technical question involved that many veterans cannot answer and this is their reason for offering their services.

All veterans whether they belong to the American Legion or not should take advantage of the offer of the Legion to assist them in filing their claims correctly. This service is free and no time should be lost in contacting the headquarters of the local American Legion posts.

Washington, Jan. 27.—Here are the steps necessary for a World War veteran to exchange his bonus certificate for cashable bonds, coupled with advice by the White House and veterans organizations:

Blanks to be used in applying for bonds will be mailed by the veterans organization to all its field officers and local offices of the veterans organizations, probably tomorrow.

If a veteran has not borrowed on his certificate and has it in his possession, he should send it with his application to the nearest regional office of the veterans administration or to the central office in Washington.

If a loan is outstanding against the certificate, the application should be sent to the veterans administration office where the loan was obtained.

If the veteran has made a certificate loan at a bank, he should send his application direct to the veterans administration in Washington.

After filing his application, the veteran need take no further action as his account will be checked by the veterans administration, forwarded to the treasury, and the amount due him will be sent him in bonds dated June 15, 1936, of $50 each, with any odd amounts covered by a government check.

A little advice from President Roosevelt and the veterans organizations, officially announced late today:

"Immediate and urgent need of funds offers, of course, a valid reason for cashing the bonds . . . Permanent advantage as opposed to wholly temporary pleasure should be the criterion."

Reid Suggests Name "Roosevelt Bridge"

Dedication Would Attract Support and Attention of State and National Officials

Editor, Montevallo Times:

Montevallo, Shelby County and the entire State of Alabama should be proud of the wonderful bridge now under construction over Shoal Creek at Montevallo. Within a few months this beautiful structure will be completed.

It seems to me that the people of Montevallo and all Shelby County should begin now to select an appropriate name, and make arrangements for the dedication of this magnificent bridge. Since this project was the very first of its kind started in the United States, I want to suggest that it be named for our matchless leader and President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The building of this bridge has given hundreds of needy and worthy people from all parts of Shelby County work, and lightened the hearts of those who otherwise would not have had funds to care for their families.

The dedication of Roosevelt Bridge at Montevallo would attract the attention and support of both state and national officials. We should have present at this dedication, the governor, congressmen and United States senators of Alabama.

In my opinion we cannot afford to do less than to pay this honor to our great President.—R. A. Reid, Montevallo, Alabama.

WE SECOND THE MOTION OF MR. REID

Hearty and instant approval should be given the suggestion of Representative Reid for naming Montevallo's new bridge for President Roosevelt, with appropriate ceremonies of dedication to the future use of the public.

This structure holds a place of distinction in the Roosevelt program of construction, re-employment and relief, as we are reminded in Mr. Reid's letter which is published in this issue of The Times.

It was, as he points out, the first job in the United States to get started under the WPA for elimination of dangerous crossings of highways and railroads.

From its beginning the project has meant much to Shelby County, affording jobs for men who otherwise would not have had a ready means of providing food and clothing for their families.

It will continue to mean much in the future, providing a great convenience to the people of Montevallo and the many who come and go this way. Ultimately we expect this bridge to form a part of a direct paved highway between Birmingham and Montgomery.

For every imaginable reason—past, present and future—we should be appreciative of the Roosevelt Recovery Program for making possible this bridge.

And we rise to second the motion of the gentleman from Shelby that it be named "Roosevelt Bridge."

COUNTRYSIDE BEAUTY

In almost every State considerable amounts of money and energy are spent to encourage the coming of new industries that will increase the flow of money into those States. Manufacturing plants and outlets for various commodities produced in the localities are much sought after to bring payrolls and a greater circulation of money.

There is one industry, however, that, by our carelessness and indifference, has been turned away from Alabama. Bt it is one that brings, according to a national economic authority, three to four billions of dollars annually to sections visited. This is the tourist trade. This source of income may not seem so important to Alabama people who are not accustomed to seeing so many tourists, but in many sections there are people who make their living catering to this trade.

According to this same national authority the tourist business is 11 per cent greater than the clothing business; 60 per cent greater than the lumber business; 185 per cent greater than the baking business; 225 percent greater than the shoe industry and 518 per cent greater than the value of the cotton crop of 1933.

Tourists travel to "see the country" and naturally seek the sections of the country where the country side is pleasing to them as they pass along and avoid the places where the scenery is not pleasant. Alabama has hundreds of native trees, shrubs and flowers that, when permitted to grow undisturbed by the destructive agencies of man, will delight the eyes and artistic nature of anyone.

Woods fires, however, are so universal in their scope and destructiveness that only a very few protected spots in Alabama show up this real beauty. These fires have kept down flowering shrubs and plants to such an extent that few realize how numerous they would be under protection. Burned woodlands with their absence of shrubs and flowers, only partially covered with trees, and eroding in many cases, serve to turn the tourist trade to other sections. A national magazine resently printed an artirle written by a tourist on passing thru a Southern State in search of scenery and pleasure but instead was greeted by smoke and burned woodlands.

Alabama should have her share of the "tourist industry." We never will until we offer them something pleasant to look at.

Alabama fires are man made and when wed ecide to stop them we can. Do your share.—Lyle Brown, Extension Forester.

Weeping Willows

Weeping willows,
Green and lacey,
Dusting their cool feathery fragrance
Over my fevered face.

Weeping willows,
Drooping and swaying,
Spilling their cool fragrance
Over the brown surface of the ground.

Weeping willows,
Ethereal in their sorrow,
Dripping their emerald tears
Into the clear blue water of the lake.

Weeping willows,
Beautiful and comforting
Making me forget my cares and sorrows
Drowning me in a cool green sea.

A Girl I Know

I know a girl
And she acts sort'a funny,
Why, she doesn't care anything
About clothes and cars and money!
And—yet I like her.
No, she doesn't flirt,
But when she goes out,
(And really she goes everywhere)
Why, the boys just crowd about!
You can't help but like her.
She, whom we all envy,
Still acts awful queer.
Often she's seen in sweaters and slacks,
And things we would shun to wear.
I'm sure you'd like her.
She, whom they all admire,
They, meaning boys, of course,
Why, she listens very, very attentively,
While they talk with all their force!
No wonder they all like her.

—Nancy Weems.

The skies are dull and gray and laden,
The ground is covered gently with a blanket of white—
Everything is white and still and deserted,
And the gray skies give no hint of light.
The house so still and white but not silent,
For voices are merry and gay within,
And holly wreaths blaze and aid the hearth fire,
In keepingt he Christmas cheer living amid the din.

—Helen Ingram.

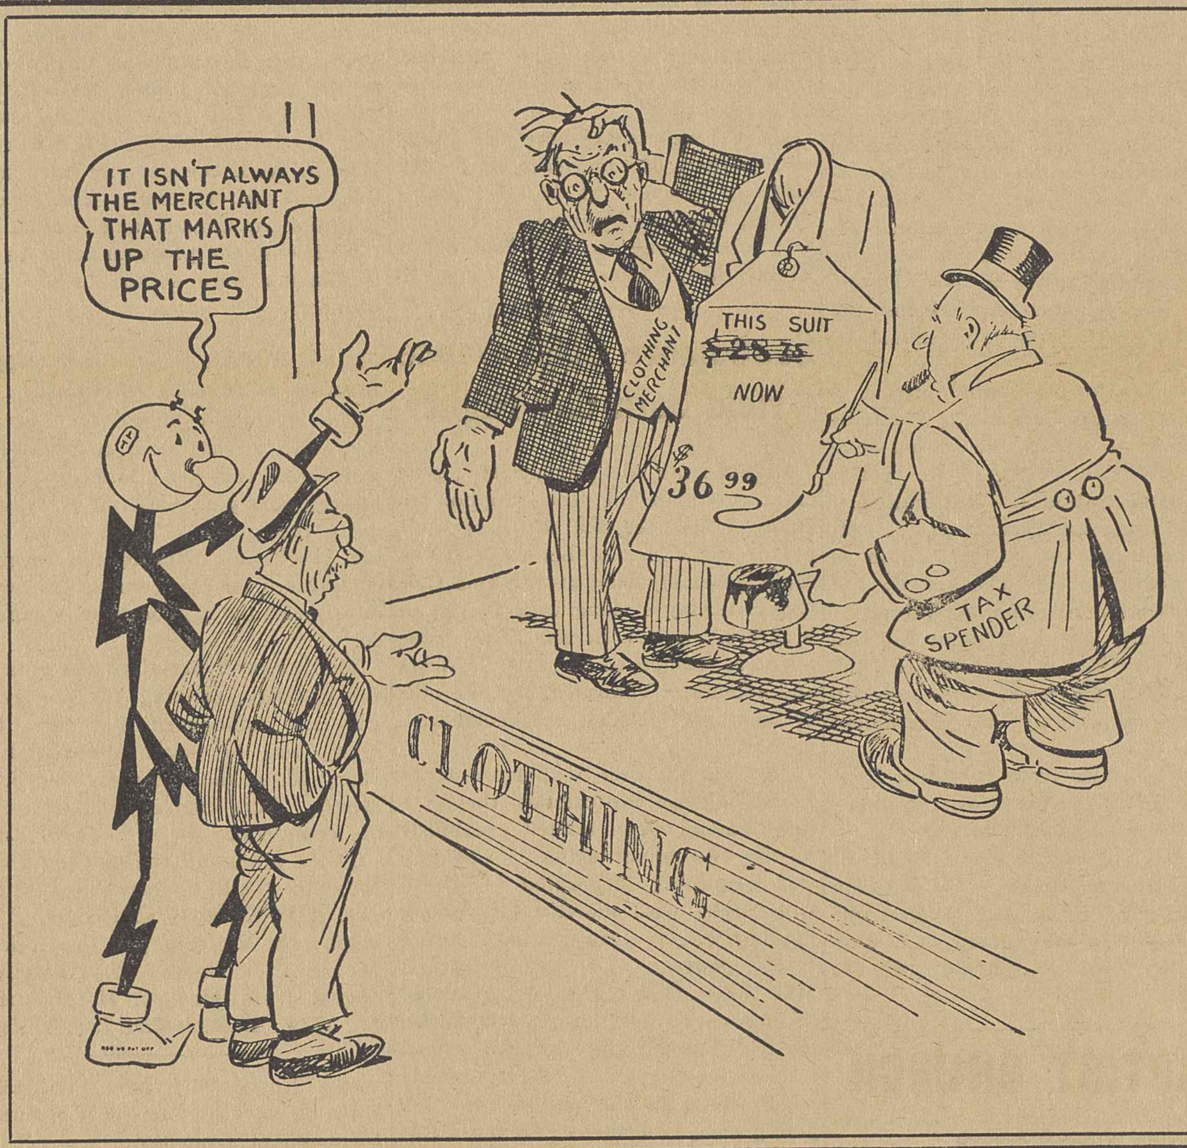
WHY BLAME THE CLOTHING MAN?



THE clothing man is not at all enthusiastic about having to pay more for his stock of clothing because of taxes and other expenses created by governmental activities. Necessarily, if you expect to have a convenient place to buy clothing, somebody must be paid to maintain such a place. Your clothing man gets his pay in the form of "profit."

He's wondering if there's going to be any profit, because he's fearful clothing prices may go so high that people will buy fewer clothes. He's also fearful of the day when he's going to have to begin paying for the enormously increased expenses of government.

No one can sell anything for less than what it costs and expect to stay in business very long. That same thing applies to governmental participation in the light and power business—EXCEPT that the government can make up its losses through the assessment of taxes which your clothing man and you must pay—even if indirectly!

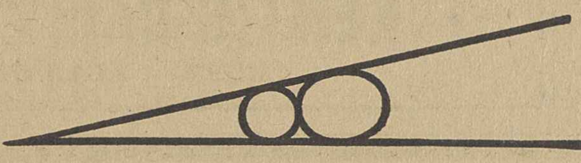
Ford

ANNOUNCES $25-A-MONTH TIME PAYMENTS AND A NEW UCC 6% FINANCE PLAN



Any New Ford V-8 Car Can Now Be Purchased for $25 a Month with Usual Low Down-Payment

This $25-a-month time-payment plan enables you to buy a New Ford V-8 car through your Ford dealer on new low monthly terms.

After the usual low down-payment is made, $25 a month is all you have to pay for any type of new car, including insurance and financing.

Your cost for this extension of credit is only ½ of 1% a month on your original unpaid balance and insurance. This plan reduces financing charges for twelve months to 6%. For example, if you owe a balance of $400 for your car and insurance, you pay $24 for the year of credit; if the balance is $200 you pay $12. Your credit cost for one year is the original unpaid balance multiplied by 6%.

UCC plans provide you with insurance protection at regular conference rates. You have not only fire and theft insurance, but $50 deductible collision, and protection against other accidental physical damage to your car.

The Universal Credit Company has made these plans available through all Ford dealers in the United States.

LIVING BIG

By Augustus J. Cox

Littleness does not become Christian character. It is not a matter of size after all. The humming bird commands equal respect with the eagle! His invisible wings hold matchless strength and fascinate the eye as much as the widespread pinions of the upper air and mountain aerie. Bigness is a soul condition, not an outward form.

The big soul lives above the little irritabilities of life and is not perturbed by the littleness of human nature. "The little flies spoil the ointment" unless we have learned the real value of life. A careless word may cloud a sunny morning; a thoughtless act cloud a sunbeam; unless life has its bigness and overcomes the incidental harm.

If one is to live the big life he must follow a big leader and gain continually the spirit of life's important and inspiring purpose.

"That will not trouble him," said a youth to whom was repeated a bit of false and unkind gossip about a companion, "He lives big." The lesser man would become at once introspective and morose, but not the one of whom he spoke. Such bits of human weakness were overlooked almost instinctively for he lived above them.

Self-defense in answering back spreads the trouble and increases littleness. The big life knows the golden value of silence. Ole Bull, the famous Scandinavian violinist, was once slandered by the press and a prominent New York newspaper offered him the freedom of its columns to answer back. He replied, "No, when they are talking against me I will play against them," and his ability, spirit and bigness won.

"He that controlleth his tongue is better than he that taketh a city," still holds, and, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things." A little soul is seldom, if ever, helped or strengthened by reputation, argument or self-defense. If he is meant for greater things, he will be won by example and patience.

The Christ-like attitude of a big life aims to gain rather than outwit a smaller life. He sees in his would-be enemy a friend who has erred in judgment, and hopes to help him. Bitterness and resentment are unknown to him. He lives in a different atmosphere. Holding a weak man up to ridicule may overcome an immediate wrong, but in doing so a stronger life may ruin an already weak soul.

Bigness is far more influential than the contagion of ill speech. The Saviour showed his bigness far more in "not answering a word" than the impulsive Peter wth his drawn sword. The larger the life the more liable is one to receive the abuse of the inferior, but bigness wins from its very worth, and champions arise from most unexpected sources. Only the pretender and unreal persons fear publicity and light. Right is its own best defense.

The little life must grow big, or succumb to suicide! Big lives grow bigger and gain strength to meet even bigger tasks. There are frequently unseen causes back of littleness with which the big life is sympathetic instead of critical. Said a slandered youth of his critic, "The poor fellow is a confirmed dyspeptic, we ought to sympathize with him instead of annihilating him. I'm for him whether he knows it or not." This man was the stroke oar of his freshman crew; his critic an unsuccessful candidate, but he lived to see his critic, his near oarsman on the varsity and they became lifelong friends.

The biggest soul that ever lived said "I am among you as one who serveth." Littleness has lost its place in history.. Bigness has won and ever will win. Let us be big enough to overlook littleness, save as we can transform it into size, and thus bring up the average by big margins.

Resolutions of the Housewife for the New Year

1. Be it resolved that this year my home shall —
   a. First of all, be a place of cleanliness, not only in surroundings, but in thought, word and deed.
   b. Be a place of unselfishness toward each other, as well as toward the community.
   c. May it be a place where rules of safety are taught and observed.
   d. May it be a place of peace, for it is here that the love of peace must be taught before we cease strife among nations.
   e. May those who go forth from my home carry with them the spirit of hope, for without it life is not worth the effort.
   f. May those who share my home find there bits of beauty that will linger in their minds even when life presents its ugliness.
   g. May each member of my household radiate the joy of living.
   h. May my home always be void of any unwholesomeness and anything but that which is genuine.
   i. Keep us from the lash of hate.
   j. May we, with Charles Kingsley, be able to say each day that we "Thank God every morning when we get up that we have something to do that day that must be done whether we like it or not; being forced to work and forced to do your best breeds in you temperance and self-control, diligence and strength of will, cheerfulness and content, and hundreds of virtues which the idle never know."
2. Last, but not least, may there always prevail a spirit of love and goodness, and so make our homes more perfect.

Keep Your Money At Home

The Times feels that it is appropriate and important to stress the thought expressed in an advertisement of Mr. J. A. Brown, and printed in this issue.

"Keep your money at home," says Mr. Brown. 'Patronize your home merchants. They appreciate and protect your business."

The trade-at-home idea is a priciple of very great importance to Montevallo, as well as to all other small towns where the progress and perpetuation of local business enterprises is of much more importance than the average person seems to realize.

Every person who buys a dollar's worth of merchandise should, before spending that dollar, stop and think of the importance of keeping that dollar in circulation in the business channels of the home community.

Some folks are misled sometimes by the ability to get something somewhere else for a few pennies cheaper than they can get it at home. This, in many instances, if figured down to the last analysis, will prove false economy from the standpoint of the community interest.

Every business man and every citizen in Montevallo should preach and practice the doctrine of Mr. Brown to "keep your money at home." It is the best community-building program we can devise, in fact the only one that will keep our town alive, wide awake, prosperous and progressive.

Nobody Likes The Weather, But There Is Nothing One Can Do About It

No doubt all of us are in agreement that this winter has been the roughest one we have seen in many years, or perhaps in our lives. But, as is usual in such cases, there is nothing we can do about it, except to shiver and button up a little tighter.

Then, just as we thought there might be a turn toward the good springtime, the elements broke loose last Wednesday with a snowfall that surpassed anything we have seen in this part of the country in a generation.

Last week's snow certainly set a mark for the weather man to shoot at for a long time. The story of this snow will be a chapter in the book of memories which many people now young will tell to their grandchildren years hence.

To melt away the snow there came a rainfal that was equal in proportions to the size of the snow. The two together created a deluge of water that literally flooded the earth's surface, and menaced the comfort and safety of people and property. It looked for a while Tuesday morning that Shoal Creek would take possession of the lower side of the city of Montevallo. The rushing current swept under the bridges and past the city with a mad fury, while the overflow crept into all the low places and surrounded some houses.

The low area back of the Masonic Building was a vast lake, the edge of which extended to the back yard of the Rogan home and Whaley's Furniture Store.

Attributed to the effect of the high waters was the terrible wreck on the Southern Railray near here, in which two lives were lost, a third man seriously injured, and much proyerty damaged. A great many local people went to the scene of the wreck Tuesday to witness the work of clearing away the debris.

Now Wednesday morning it is cold as blizzards again, and we shudder with fear that we may yet have more snow and ice before the flowers begin to bloom.

Alabama Power Co. Will Spend Over Nine Million Dollars In 1936

Birmingham, Ala., Feb. 3.—It was stated today by Alabama Power Company that it would spend more than $9,700,000 during the year 1936 in conducting its business in the state, exclusive of payments of bond interest and preferred stock dividends. Approximately $3,500,000 of this sum will go into wages and salaries for its employees in 66 of the 67 counties where they are residents and citizens. State, local and federal taxes will amount to more than $2,300,000.

Extensions and additions to the system will amount to more than $2,500,000, of which new rural lines under construction and planned for the year will require $1,200,000.

This program is designed not only to carry lines to communities now without service, but to improve existing facilities so that service will be continuously made more effecient to all its customers.

The company will continue its policy of using Alabama material and purchasing in Alabama wherever possible.

Railroad Wreck On Southern Railway

TWO KILLED, ONE INJURED AS ENGINE AND TWO CARS ARE DERAILED

Two men are dead and the third is in a Birmingham hospital in a serious condition as a result of the derailment of a northbound freight train on the Southern Railway enroute to Birmingham from Selma early Tuesday morning.

The accident occurred about two o'clock at a point near Piney Wood Tank, and about fifteen miles from Montevallo. Fireman Frank Kennamer and brakeman Henry Brown were killed instantly. Engineer J. G. Kelley suffered a broken leg and was badly scalded. His condition, while serious, is not expected to prove fatal.

The accident is said to have been caused by the caving in of a steep fill under the tracks, due to the excessive rainfall and snow. The engine and two box cars left the tracks. The cars were loaded with coal and beef cattle. Thirty-five to forty head of the cattle were killed.

The train is reported to have been moving at a slow rate of speed, due to the condition of the track, and this probably prevented additional loss of lives.

Kennamer and Brown were buried beneath the coal and cattle and it was several hours later before their bodies were extricated from the mass of wreckage. A wrecker from Birmingham reached the scene soon after the accident happened and work of recovering the bodies and clearing the track was begun. Engineer Kelly was carried to a Birmingham hospital for treatment.

All of the victims had been in the service of the Southern Railway for several years and resided at Selma.

Kennamer was about 50 years old and leaves a wife and one child. Brown, age about 40, is survived by his wife and a daughter, age about five. Brown is a nephew of Mr. H. C. Langston, of the Standard Service Station, Montevallo.

Traffic over the railroad was held up by the wreck until late in the day Tuesday.

Miss Gould was appointed to serve on one of the committees of the conference to investigate phases of dramatic work which are not standardized in the schools.

Among the outstanding events of the program in Chicago were demonstrations of radio reading, make-up and a discussion of choral reading in its relation to speech education. Miss Maud Mays Babcock of the University of Utah was named president of the association, being the second woman to hold this office.

NAMING OUR BRIDGE

Since the suggestion made by Representative R. A. Reid last week that Montevallo's new highway structure over Shoal Creek be named "Roosevelt Bridge," we hear of others who have names to suggest.

One leading citizen in discussing the question said he favored the name "Lyman Brdge," in honor of the late Judge Edward S. Lyman.

We suppose there can be no denial of the right of the people of Montevallo to adopt a name for the bridge. A name might be selected from the field of our national leaders and statesmen, as suggested by Mr. Reid.

It might be taken from the list of our own home-town citizens who have rendered conspicuous service in the community.

With the many eligible and appropriate names we have to choose from it should be no hard or confusing job for us to agree upon the name most suitable for the purpose.

And if the horrible weather of the past month holds on, it appears we shall have plenty of time to decide on a name by the time the bridge is completed.

MR. OLIVER'S RETIREMENT

The decision of Representative William B. Oliver of the Sixth District not to stand for re-election will be read with regret by those citizens of Alabama who appreciate the fine personal qualities of that gentleman. The regret will be all the more acute when it is read also that Mr. Oliver is retiring from Congress upon the stern advice of his physician.

Mr. Oliver has been a high-minded, intelligent and industrious American Congressman for more than twenty years. He carred into the halls of Congress a personal dignity and poise and a scholarship that commanded instant respect from his colleagues. He was not a spectacular figure in Washington. Rather was he the quiet counselor and conciliator, ready enough in debate, but most useful in conference. —Montgomery Advertiser.

REV. FANCHER RETURNS

The many friends of Rev. Henry W. Fancher and his excellent family will be delighted to learn of their removal to Montevallo where in the future they will reside.

For the past ten years they have been located at Russellville, where Rev. Fancher served as pastor of the Baptist Church. Mrs. Fancher is engaged in teaching at Russellville and will arrive here at the expiration of her school term.

Rev. Fancher was born and reared here, and says he is delighted to be back once again in the old home town.

WILLARD W. BEATTY

Willard W. Beatty, for the past three years president of the Progressive Education Association, and for 10 years superintendent of the Bronxville Pubic Sihools, Bronxville, N.Y., left his position there February 1 to become Director of Indian Education in the Indian Affairs department of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. Beatty received his B. S. at the University of California in 1913 and his M. A. there in 1921. He has done graduate work at Alabama College, Montevallo, Ala.

MISS WINER AND MR. KILDEA WERE PRESENTED IN RECITAL

Honor Winer, soprano, and York Kildea, violinist, of the Alabama College Music faculty, presented a joint recital, accompanied by Elizabeth Blair Chamberlin, also of the faculty, at the meeting of the Birmingham Chapter of the Alumnae Association of the College last week.

Mr. Kildea played two movements of a Vieuvtemps Concerto and a group of songs by contemporary English and American composers, and "A Dream," by Edward Grieg.

Dean T. H. Napier spoke at the close of the program, at which Miss Dorothy Kitchens, president of the chapter, presided.

Girl Scouts

World Friendship

Although February is designated as International Month in the Girl Scout program, we might think of every month in the year as a world friendship month, if the Girl Scout ideal is carried out literally. Reflecting on this theme at this time the Girl Scout News Sheet for February gives fourteen thousand troops of Girl Scouts registered at national headquarters in New York, with nine of these American troops on foreign soil. Three are in China, one in Uganda, Africa, one each in Aruba, Dutch West Indies, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, Haiti, India and Persia.

"The United States through Mrs. James J. Storrow, of Boston, founded the international home at Adelboden, Switzerland, to which a fund, known as the Juliette Low Memorial, sends American and other girls each summer for a holiday. World friendship through closer contact and mutual understanding is a cornerstone of this Girl Scout building which is used by all the thrty-three countries in which girl scouting is carried on.

Girl Scout Dress

Mrs. Robert E. Swaine, of New York, chairman of Girl Scout National Business Division, says: "Girl Scout's Dress is her passport to friendship, and insures her a welcome in thirty-three countries. Thousands of girls with congenial tastes may be found in these countries uniformed with her diplomatic credentials."

No girl has to wear one. In fact, there are only certain times when she may.

Girl Scout headquarters select and style the uniform from the standpoint of comfort, laundering possibility and cost, as well as frequent style changes, in order that the official dress for the teen-age Girl Scout will not be old-fashioned.

"EXTRA GIRL"

When Texas Centennial Exposition officials began to select the Rangerettes, hostesses for the Exposition, they planned to have one who was born in each of the 48 states. Then along came Mabel Rooks, shown above, and she passed the strict requirements. Officials found later she had been born in the District of Columbia, so they increased the corps to 50, giving themselves a little leeway in the matter of states.

REV. H. W. FANCHER; AN APPRECIATION

(From Franklin County Times)

Learning that Brother Fancher and his splendid family are leaving us next week, I want to express my appreciation of this excellent family.

It was my good pleasure to meet them soon after they came here ten years ago. Since then our friendship has grown and ripened. I have had the pleasure of having them in my home several times and enjoy sweet fellowship with them.

Mrs. Fancher has been a great help to her husband in his work, doing splendid work with the young people and helping them in all church work. Their children are both fine young people.

Brother Fancher is a high-class Christian gentleman, a deep thinker, a close student and splendid preacher. He is a man of deep convictions and is always found on the right side of all moral issues. His cooperation with the other churches has always been cordial and brotherly.

His work has been constructive and lasting. He and his family have been valuable assets to our town and community and they will be sadly missed.

I shall miss them and my wish is that wherever they go they will make many loyal friends and that the richest blessings of Heaven may abide with them.

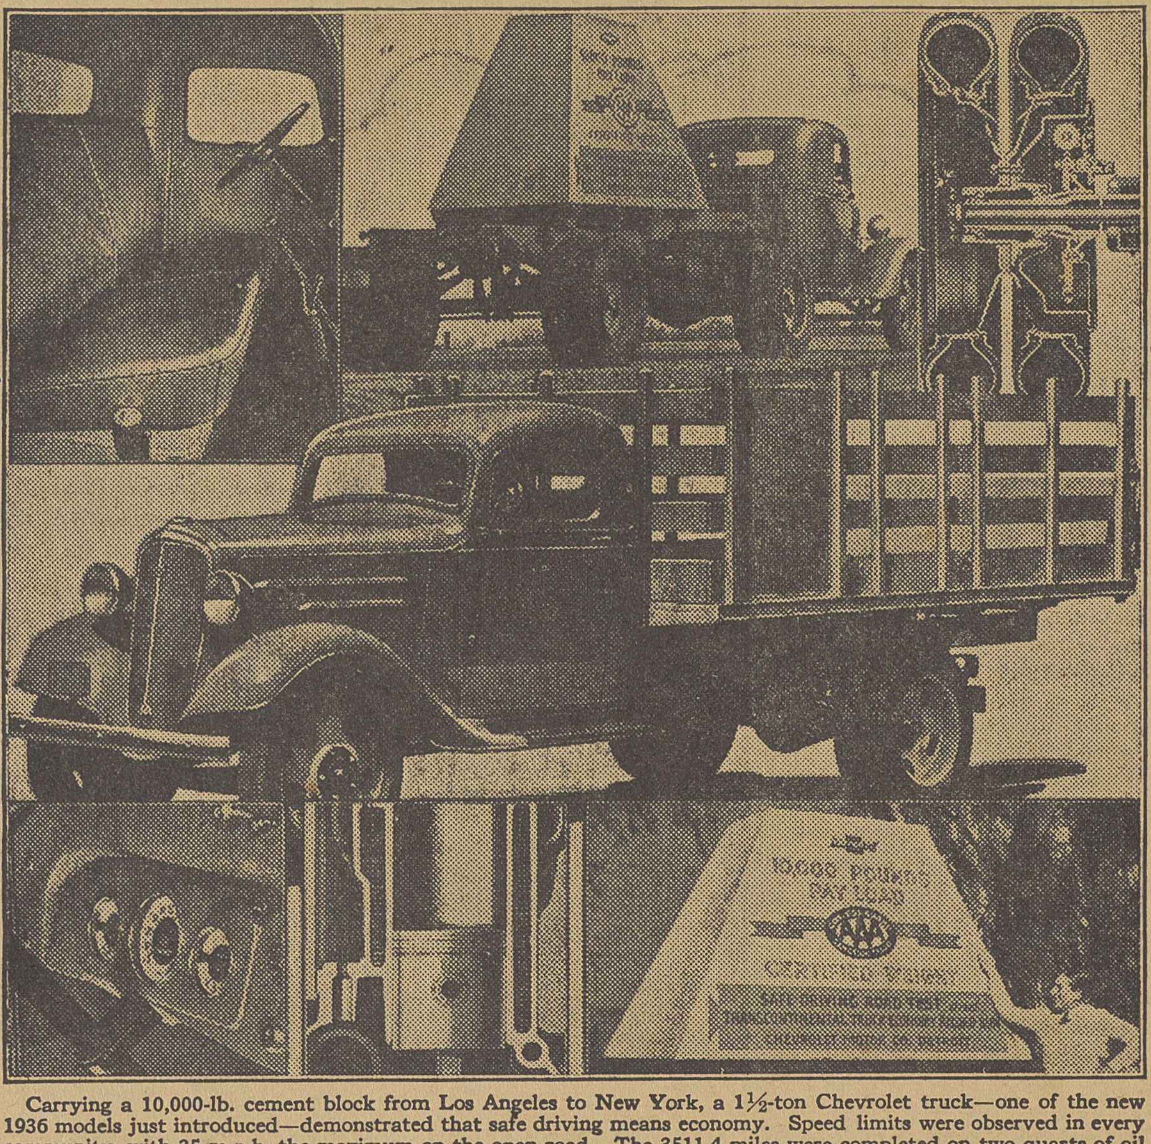
New Chevrolet Truck on Economy-Safety Run



Carrying a 10,000-lb. cement block from Los Angeles to New York, a 1½-ton Chevrolet truck—one of the new 1936 models just introduced—demonstrated that safe driving means economy. Speed limits were observed in every community, with 35 m.p.h. the maximum on the open road. The 3511.4 miles were completed on two quarts of oil and 308.6 gallons of gasoline, at a cost of 01.6 cents per mile, or one-third of a cent per ton mile. The entire run was completed without any mechanical failure, repairs, or even a scratched fender. The illustrations show the test truck and features of the new 1936 models. Coupe type cabs with solid steel roof, full-floating rear axle, and full-length water jackets, are some of the improvements. In the lower right, Harry Hartz, who drove the cross-continent test, is seen beside the 10,000-lb. block. The test was officially observed by the American Automobile Association.

HUSBANDS SHOULDN'T BLAME THEIR WIVES

HUSBANDS shouldn't blame their wives because the household money doesn't go as far as it used to—shouldn't blame them because they're having to pay more for clothing and food.

The wife can't help it. The merchant she buys from can't help it. The manufacturer of goods can't help it. They've all got to share in paying the huge cost of conducting government nowadays. They've all got to help make up the government losses occasioned by its activities in such enterprises as the electric light and power and other businesses.

When a business man persists in selling things for less than what they cost—he "goes broke." When government sells things for less than what they cost, or engages in activities outside the realm of government, it makes up the loss by more taxation.

Wives and husbands may not be conscious of paying these taxes because tax bills are not labelled to pay for any particular venture.

Many people do not pay direct taxes. But pay taxes they must—the taxes are hidden in the price of things they buy.

Chicago, Feb. 4.—J. Louis Comiskey rotund owner of the Chicago White Sox, can tell you that money is the root of baseball woes.

Ever since Comiskey sold Al Simmons to the world's champinship Tigers fr $75,000, he has had his troubles. Every club owner in the American League—and the minors—want that $75,000 or part of it.

As preparations got underway today for the departure to the Spring training camp at Pasadena, Calif., Feb. 20, seven members of the Sox had failed to return the signed contracts for 1936. Those unsigned:

Mr. Towery Declares The Ford V-8 for 1936 Is Safe

Because of a mountng toll of accidents on the highways and boulevards, automobile buyers, when shopping for their 1936 car, have made safety a paramount consideration, declare local automobile dealers.

At last, say dealers, universal newspaper campaigning has awakened in the motoring public the acute necessity for safer driving. Accordingly, safety features in the new cars have become the deciding factor in six out of ten sales made today.

Said Mr. G. T. Towery, local Ford dealer recently: "In my opinion, one of the chief reasons for Ford's outstanding sales leadership in 1935—when over a million Ford cars and trucks were sold — was the careful attention which designers and engineers gave to the building of the Ford automobile.

"For instance, the purchaser does not have to pay extra money for safety glass all around. Safety glass is needed for safe driving anywhere and is required by law in many states.

"Furthermore, Ford was the first low-price car to give the public the extra protection of a steel body, a type of construction that is universally regarded as a safety factor of prime importance.

"Lately, there has been a growing public demand for automobiles that steer lightly and easily. With an ever-increasing number of automobiles on the road, quck wheel reaction is necessary, especially in city traffic. In line with this trend, the Ford factory has gven to the public a car that requires a very minimum of 'driving pressure' to operate. There is a twenty-five percent decrease in steering effort in the 1936 models.

MR. G. T. TOWERY

Proprietor of the Towery Motor Co., of Montevallo, authorized Ford Dealers in Shelby County.

"The Ford Motor Company does not experiment with safety, and the sturdy brakes reflect that policy. They are the safest brakes made, of sure-acting mechanical design, and they stop the car quickly and with certainty under all driving conditions.

"The low center of gravity on the Ford V-8 is important for safety. The car 'hugs the road,' reducing sidesway and the chances of skidding on the curves

"The Ford V-8 performs more smoothly and silently than ever. Quietness of operation gives a greater driving steadiness, for a driver strained by a noisy motor is not the safest driver. The powerful V-8 motor offers a speedy pickup, unmatched by any other car, regardless of price. Rapid Pickup is as essential for driving safety as good brakes.

"These foregoing are a few features which make the Ford V-8 one of the safest, most reliable cars on the highways today." Mr. Towery concluded.

Expo's Manager

William A Webb, above, of Dallas was named general manager of the Texas Centennial Exposition, which opens in Dallas June 6, because of his long experience in handling rush construction jobs.

A veteran railroader, one of Mr Webb's greatest accomplishments was rebuilding and remodeling the great South Australia government-operated railroad, a $70,000,000 project. He was recommended for the task, which he finished in 1931, by the U. S. Department of State.

Dr. Farmer Speaker At Women's Club

The regular monthly meeting of the Business and Professional Women's Club was conducted by the President, Mrs. Denson Elliott, in the parlor of the St. George Hotel on Monday night. The club was especially glad to welcome two new members, Mrs. A. H. Watson and Mrs. Ida Hendrick.

The president announced that the executive board would meet in two weeks with the chairman of committees to plan a program of work. Miss Annie Kemp, chairman of the public relations committee announced plans for cooperating with the Exchange Club in arranging for signs to be placed on all roads entering Montevallo. Mrs. Margaret Coyle, chairman of the education committee, presented her plan for a monthly group meeting to study consumer problems. Plans were made to cooperate with the American Association of University Women. It should be a most enthusiastic study group.

A resolution was passed by the club endorsing the plan for a community chest in Shelby County and the secretary, Mrs. Ashley Jeter, was instructed to send a copy to Miss Annie Louise Pruitt, head of the county welfare work.

Miss Georgia Leeper, who, as chairman of the legislative committee, had asked Mr. R. A. Reid to speak, announced that he had been called out of town by the meeting of the legislature and introduced Dr. Hallie Farmer in his place. Miss Farmer spoke on the discrimination against women. She called attention to the fact that Alabama did not allow women to serve on the jury in spite of the fact that women were brought to trial for crimes committed in the state. She spoke also on the economic discrimination against women in business as to salaries and promotions. She described at length Article 213 passed by Congress which forbade the government employment of husband and wife and the hardships this had worked upon women in the government service. She urged the members to write the congressmen on the committee responsible for getting out the bill repealing this law. She showed how this discrimination against women is a matter of custom and economic pressure which necessitates an organized stand of the women in this country to prevent its going as far as it has in Italy and Germany.

More Revenue Or Schools To Close

RESOLUTIONS ARE MADE BY THE STATE BOARD OF EDUCATION

We are rapidly approaching another of these annual crises in the affairs of public education in Alabama. Again the schools are going to close unless additional revenue is provided at a very early date. For the fourth time within the past four years this has happened. Once, schools did close in most of the counties of the state and remained closed. For the past two years they would have closed had it not been for federal relief. For these same two years we have humiliated our teachers by practically requiring them to take a pauper's oath before they could draw government relief salaries of $60 per month. This will continue no longer because the federal government has notified us that it will send no more money to Alabama for this purpose. The teachers are commended for their faithful service during these trying times. Not more than sixty per cent of state appropriations have been paid in full since 1932.

We have had presented to us the proposed seven months minimum program for our elementary and high schools. It is truly a minimum program clculated on a depression basis. May we submit that we have practiced economy with a vengeance. Simply, this program provides a state salary of $76 per month for teachers, an average of $70 per month for a bus driver furnishing his own bus, gas, oil and maintenance, a small allowance for other current expense based on the average annual expenditure of the four depression years, and only 6.9 per cent of the county budget for capital outlay in order to enable counties to take advantage of WPA funds Even this program stripped to its barest essentials is to be provided for only seven months if the state pays its appropriations in full. School revenue—state, county and local—has declined over $5,000,000 since 1929-30, while 60,000 more children are attending our schools.

The representatives of the people are soon to meet in an extraordinary session of the Legislature. We must face the issue squarely. Education is facing a deficit of over $3,821,000. Unless this revenue is provided, schools will automatically close short of a normal term. The present revenue estimated to be available for this year is sufficient to operate the schools for a minimum program term of only 5 and three-fourths months.

We repeat there is no escaping or dodging the issue. Additional revenue ust be provided to pay for this minimum program or the schools will close. No part of it can be cut off without causing schools in some county or counties of the state to close. In the final analysis, the people, by their representatives, must say whether they believe in public education enough to pay the necssary taxs to give the children of Alabama a decent chance in life.

Baptist Training School Last Week

THERE GOES OUR BOY!

Bob Reid, member of the Legislature from Shelby, and hailing from the classic and cultured City of Montevallo, came in Monday, red necktie and all. Mr. Reid is an automobile dealer in his home city. There are a number of business men in the Legislature, and Mr. Reid is one of the outstanding men in this class. He is safe, sound and conservative and nobody can vote him, except probably his wife. Having been a citizen of Shelby County at one time, and having a close interest in the county, we have been watching Bob Reid, and he is doing his job well and will continue to do it well, or we are not quite a good judge of men.—Atticus Mullin, in Montgomery Advertiser.

THE DISGUISE

I believe someone is picking her geese,
Or at least the white feathers are flying
They fall as soft as a blanket, disguising the whole world,
transfiguring its barren ugliness to the beauty and purity of a saint.
Stop, consider a moment:
Some people are that way;
Digging under the outer soft blanket,
you find, the same raw ugliness,
the same barren hypocrisy,
which the snow hides.

(By Bob Anderson, Reporter)

This week marks the twenty-sixth anniversary of the Boy Scouts of America. A group of men who were interested in boys formed this organization on February 8, 1910. Now, twenty-six years later, the scouts and scout leaders number over a million. Last Saturday President Roosevelt, Honorary President of the Scouts, spoke to them over a nation - wide radio hookup.

The Montevallo Boy Scouts are celebrating this anniversary. On their meeting of Friday, the 7th, they were presented a cake in honor of anniversary week by Mrs. Vaughan. The Scouts apreciated this very much.

Girl Scouts

Greetings to Boy Scouts

The Girl Scouts Council of Montevallo extends greetings to the Boy Scouts on this, the national birthday of the Scout organization.

We join the nation in salute to the ideals as proposed for Boy Scouts.

Yet, we wuold applaud the local committee under Mr. Anderson's leadership, and the Scout leaders under the direction of Mr. Giddens, for the efforts that have been spent in order to bring this program to the Boy Scouts of Montevallo.

National Program

"One aim of Girl Scouts for 1936," says Mrs. Paul Rittenhouse, national director of Girl Scouts, New York, "is the development of special activities suited to different ages of girls."

Including the younger group of Brownies, the girls range in age from seven to eighteen. There is most certainly a line of demarcation existing between the high school girl and her younger sister. The Girl Scout program is based on the interests, enthusiasm and needs of girls. With a ten per cent increase in membership over last January 16 we now have 384,000 members, and a rapid growth in the number of communities served, a heavy responsibility is placed on the national organization, in regard to the program offered.

Girl Scouting incorporates many principles underlying progressive education, and progressive educational experiments and includes mental, physical and character development activities.

One of the most important contributions of Girl Scouts in the recreation field is the pioneering it has done in work with small groups.

In the past year, the Mariner or sea program, with resultant boy and girl parties was carried out successfully for older girls. During the coming year, Girl Scouts will aim at an American arts and crafts program, correlated with nature study, and will also develop a nature study suited to girls in city areas. A program study is now being made for Girl Scouts by an impartial group of scientists and educators, who will probably report their findings at the end of the year.

Leadership, as always, is a major problem of an organization which depends on volunteer effort. The development of sound leadership of high standard continues to be a chief concern of the Girl Scouts. We propose to set up during 1936 a more effective machinery for securing it and for training it when secured.

This entire article was sent out in the February Girl Scout News Sheet from national headquarters.

SHE might HAVE BEEN A GREAT SINGER....

AS A LITTLE TOT, Alice loved to sing to her "dollies." Singing satisfied something in her soul. "I'm going to be an opera singer when I grow up," she said. And the way she said it made folks believe her.

But Alice was never to realize her ambition. Years of study — strained-eyes — headaches. "The game's not worth the candle," Alice thought, in a moment of desperation.

Today Alice's "stage" is a kitchen sink . . . her "orchestra" the rattle of dishes.

- This story may have had a different ending—if Alice's parents had provided her with ample light for studying. Eye-strain easily can undermine both health and ambition!

Montgomery, Feb. 10—The State Conservation Department reports that 1,202,887 fish were planted in streams of this State by its agents during the year 1934-35.

This is the largest number the department has ever planted in any one year and surpasses last year's mark of 948,450 by 254,437.

This restocking program included the planting of 866,977 bream, 326,028 bass and 9,882 of various other species of fish. A total of 763,175 bream and 308,740 bass were transplanted from the state hatchery at Estaboga and its sub-stations.

Eighty-one thousand six hundred braem and 9,410 bass were transported on state trucks from the federal hatchery at Marion to stream sites, but these figures do not represent the total number of fish planted from the federal hatchery.

In addition to these plantings, members of the department's field staff rescued 22,202 bream, 7,878 bass and the 9,882 of other varieties from receding waters and transplanted them in other streams..

Having only recently completed a two-year improvement project at Estaboga hatchery, the department is anticipating an even greater output this year. The project included the building of a concrete wall to protect the hatchery spring, two brood ponds and the enlargemnt of two other ponds.

An expanson program likewise has been under way at the Marion federal hatchery which now has 45 ponds available for rearing purposes.

Throngs Coming To College Night

VISITORS FROM MANY PARTS OF THE STATE EXPECTED TO ATTEND

Many former students of Alabama College are expected to begin reaching the campus Friday, morning for the seventeenth annual College Night scheduled for that and the following evening, each program beginning at 7:30 o'clock, in Palmer Hall.

The final dress rehearsal will be held Thursday evening, when the rival divisions of the student body will put the finishing touches on their various acts, which include stunts, impersonations, songs and toasts.

In the audience will be a number of members of the Board of Trustees of the college and members of the Legislature as honor guests. The event will be judged by two selected officials on the first presentation and by three Saturday night, when the decision of the five will name the winners.

Miss Isabel Henderson of Mobile, president of the Student Government Association, will preside. Every other student will participate in this original program, which has grown from a small dining room entertainment to one which annually draws a total attendance of approximately 3,000. It was necessary to give it on successive evenings in order to accommodate the crowds.

The annual Gold-Purple Hockey game Saturday morning will add to the trend of campus excitement as the climax in three weeks of preparation for College Night approaches in the final stage performances Saturday night. Misses Mary Nall Kendrick, Selma; Helen Hewell, Mobile; Billie Hill, Saginaw, and Aileen Holley, Northport hold the responsible positions of leaders and assistants and will direct their sides in songs at intervals throughout the program.

Mrs. Maulding Held For Shooting Killingsworth

Preliminary hearing has been set for next Saturday before Justice J. L. Wilson, at Clanton, for Mrs. J. E. Maulding, charged with murder in connection with the fatal shooting of Claud Killingsworth last week.

Killingsworth was carried to the hospital in Clanton last Wednesday, suffering great loss of blood from a pistol wound in the leg. He reported to hospital officials that he had been shot late Tuesday evening by Mrs. Maulding.

Upon investigation of the case by Sheriff Hardy, of Chilton County, the following story of the case was told by Mrs. Maulding:

That she and her two small children were alone in their home while her husband was away getting some fire wood. That Killingsworth came to her home in an intoxicated condition, and sought to force his way in. That she succeeded in closing the door before he entered. That Killingsworth went away but returned in a few minutes, this time making what looked like would be a successful effort to break the door down. That she secured a pistol and fired at the door which the man was trying to break down.

Hospital authorities reported that Killingsworth had a pistol wound in his leg and was very weak from loss of blood. He died of complications of blood poisoning Friday, whereupon Mrs. Maulding was taken into custody by county officers to answer a charge of murder. Mrs. Maulding, it is understood, will offer a plea that she shot in defense of herself and her children.

The shooting occurred in the Dry Valley neighborhood, in Chilton County, which was the home of both parties to the affair.

PETE JARMAN GETS IN CONGRESS RACE

Little, If Any, Opposition Expected For Former Secretary of State in Candidacy for Sixth District Representative

PETE B. JARMAN, JR.

Pete Jarman, the man who gave the veteran "Buck" Oliver a close race for the Sixth District seat in Congress two years ago, again is a candidate for the place. Mr. Oliver having announced that he will not again seek the office, it looks this time as if the road to Washington is wide open for Pete Jarman, with very little opposition in sight.

Not excepting the person of the able Representative of the Sixth District who has served valiantly in Congress for over twenty years, it may be said there is not a man in the District more generally known among the people of the different counties of the District than Pete Jarman. In fact, he is so well acquainted among the people that we feel it is entirely unnecessary to take up any time by way of introduction of the candidate.

More appropriate to the occasion, we feel, is the statement to the citizens of the Sixth District, made and released by Mr. Jarman this week, as he announced himself a candidate for Representative. We reproduce his statement in full below:

Having been affiliated with the public life, first of my county and later of my state throughout my life, I like to think of myself as a public servant. To serve my fellow Alabamians, my party and my nation to the best of my ability has even been my keen desire.

I am appreciative, indeed, of the general sentiment which seems to have crystallized throughout the sixth district shortly following my good but unsuccessful race for congress two years ago, that I should run again which race would prove successful.

Because of this sentiment my announcement for congress will cause no surprise. My campaign will, of course, be waged upon a high plane. While in the final analysis all candidates must primarily stand on their records, the other planks of my platform will follow in due course.

While I was reasonably acquainted with the district when I announced before, many new acquaintances ripened into friendships during that campaign which will afford me much pleasure throughout the remaining years of my life. During my visits in the district since many other strong friendships have occurred, literally thousands, who for various good reasons could not support me before, having assured me of their support in the event of another race.

In announcing my candidacy, I desire to gratefully acknowledge all of these assurances of support, new as well as old, and to pledge you my best efforts to make you a good congressman. It will be my purpose to be your representative in Washington, rendering allegiance to the whole people of the great Sixth District, poor and rich, low and high, without favoritism to any clique or group. Toward that end, I want you always to feel free, during this campaign, as well as in the future to discuss with me any issue in which you may be interested.

While it is my keen desire to see every voter in the district prior to the election, and frequently henceforth, I can scarcely hope to be so fortunate before May 5th. If I find it impossible to contact you, I hope you will get in touch with me or inquire from some friend as to my qualifications and experience for this very important post of service.

While my election appears most probable, the fact that politics is quite uncertain causes me to urge my friends to take nothing for granted and to continue their magnificent efforts in my behalf, particularly interesting themselves in getting out the vote, which will otherwise not be large in this off-year. If the opinion of many that we have an open road to this broader field of service is erroneous, let's open it. If it is correct, let's make the victory certain, positive and overwhelming.

Your efforts in my behalf will be deeply appreciated. I want, not only your vote, but your active, energetic influence. Afterwards, your affairs at the Nation's Capitol will be regarded as an avowed public trust, and I will strive earnestly to serve my people my district, my party and my nation well.

Together we cannot, must not, will not fail. — Sincerely, Pete B. Jarman, Jr.

12,000 Families Under Resettlement Program

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 17.—Nearly 12,000 farm families forced on relief two years ago now are paying their way out of the depression under the Resettlement Administration's new 1936 rehabilitation program in Alabama, Florida, Georgia and South Carolina, according to a report released by the headquarters of Region five here today.

The rehabilitation case load in 1935 the report showed, was 39,466. These families now are being taken over into the 1936 program in preparation for the year's crop season.

Loans made under the new program totaled 11,854 and amounted to $2,633,138 on January 24 in the four states. The average amount of the loans was $222.

Under the rehabilitation program, destitute and low-income farm families judged capable of operating the farms if provided with good land, financial assistance, and agricultural guidance are being extended loans to enable them to purchase tools, work animals, seed fertilizer, and other things needed on the farm. In this way, impoverished farm families that otherwise would be seeking direct relife are enabled to maintain themselves as taxpayers and responsible citizens.

Each family extended a rehabilitation loan agrees to operate its farm in accordnce with a farm and home management plan worked out by the recipient of the loan, the county extension agent, and the resettlement supervisor.

The borrower is thus given the benefit for some of the best agricultural advice available in his community. Farm plans are designed to offer a well balanced agricultural program which promises sufficient cash income to enabe the family to become self-supporting and liquidate its obligations to the Resettlement Administration and to other creditors.

SPECIALIZING IN SEEDS FOR FARMERS AND GARDENERS

Mr. J. A. Brown announces this week that the Montevallo Grocery Company has taken over the line of seeds formerly handled by Mr. Pat J. Kroell. With a large addition of new stock seeds making the line more varied and complete, Mr. Brown is able to fill every need of farm and garden.

Particularly appealing to buyers of seeds is the fact that Mr. Brown buys seeds in bulk, thus obtaining a much better price than heretofore. This advantage he will pass on to his customers when they purchase seeds in small quantities.

Not alone is the seed line of Mr. Brown attractive and advantageous to farmers, but his stock of fertilizers as well. His slogan is "When you think of seeds and fertilizers, think of us."

DR. HARMAN AUTHO[illegible] TO ACT BY THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES

Montgomery, Ala., Feb. 14. — The board of trustees of Alabama College, Montevallo, Friday authorized Dr. A. F. Harman, president, to act on a committee composed of Gov. Graves and the heads of other higher institutions to negotiate for a new lease on Radio Station WAPI, Birmingham.

Trustees of Alabama Polytechnic Institute and the University of Alabama already had taken similar action, which Gov. Graves said was the principal reason for the meeting of the Montevallo Board.

The trustees elected E. H. Wills, of Montevallo, as treasurer, succeeding E. S. Lyman, deceased. Lucien P. Giddens, of Birmingham, was chosen secretary to succeed Wills.

Dr. Harman reported the bequest of $12,500 from Miss Unity Dancy, of Decatur, to be used in promoting the departments of English and speech, and another bequest by Mrs. Ruth Leventritt, of New York, as a scholarship fund for young women from the Birmingham public schools.

Mrs. Leventritt was the daughter of the late M. V. Joseph, of Birmingham, former member of the Montevallo board of trustees.

Miss Isabel Henderson, of Mobile, president of the Student Government Association, and Miss Mary McLendon, of Birmingham, invited members of the Legislature and state officials to attend the annual college night exercises February 21.

Civic Club Votes For Parity Of The Schools

Declaring itself in favor of a constitutional amendment to insure parity for education in Alabama, the Montevallo Civic Culb, at its meeting on Wednesday, adopted a resolution urging the Governor, the Legislature and the people to stand for the adoption and enforcement of a budget principle to the end that education be not discriminated against, but rather be placed on a parity wth other state functions in the matter of appropriation.

The resolution, read by Lucien Giddens, chairman of the committee, and rousingly approved by the Club, is as follows:

Whereas, when the budget principle was written into the Constitution it was understood that the available revenues would be distributed without any discrimination to meet each and every appropriation proportionately except, of course, payment of the public debt and the care of the state's wards; and for such operation of the budget it was hoped that there would result governmental economy and efficiency; and,

Whereas, the actual operation of the budget has been and is different and under the court's construction of the budget law all appropriations are not prorated without discrimination, but public education is made to bear the brunt of all prorations, so that under the budget for the present fiscal year over 90 per cent of the total loss by proration falls upon public education; and,

Whereas, this is obviously not a fair operation of a true budget principle, and can have no effect in bringing about economy in the operation of all those departments and state agencies whose appropriations are not reduced by proration, but can result only in starving public education and in depriving the children of our state of a fair deal; and,

Whereas, an educated citizenry is a prime essential to the well-being and progress of the state;

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the Montevallo Civic Club that we do strongly urge upon the governor, the legislature, and the people of Alabama that this inequity be corrected by constitutional amendment, that a true budget principle be adopted and enforced, and that appropriations for public education be not discriminated against, but rather be placed at least on a parity with other appropriations; and to the accomplishment of that just end we pledge our active and wholehearted support.

JARMAN FOR CONGRESS

The announcement of Pete Jarman as a candidate for Congress in the Sixth District is made formally this week, and is not at all unexpected in political circles.

It has been generally recognized since the last campaign, in which Mr. Jarman made such a gratifying race, that he would be a candidate again this year. His chances for success have been growing better all the time, and it has been freely predicted he would win the Sixth District seat in 1936, regardless of any and all opposition.

Now, since the decision of Congressman Oliver that he will not run again, it is generally accepted that the road to Washington is left wide open for Pete Jarman.

It is not known yet whether a candidate will oppose Pete. We see no use of it, becasue on the one hand Pete will beat anyone who may oppose him. And on the other hand, Pete is plenty good for our representative at Washington, and we can see no use in complicating things by a useless political scrap.

Mr. Jarman deserves the honor he seeks, because he is able to and will make what to him is an honor an instrument of service to the people. He has had many other honors placed upon him by the people of his State, and he has, in every instance, been more concerned about serving his people than he was about glorifying himself.

That's the kind of stuff Pete is made of, and we say it is good enough to make anybody a good Congressman.

MONTEVALLO'S ROADS

The excessive and extremely bad weather of this winter has served to further impress us that the road subject is one of vital importance to Montevallo.

Every way one starts out of the city he is faced with a stretch of bumps, mud holes, and most everything that goes with the unpleasantness of a bad road.

The road to Calera is perhaps the most traveled highway in and out of Montevallo. The terror of this piece of road during the winter has been frightful, but somewhat mitigated by the frequent reports that it will be paved during this summer. Even this week we hear that the work is about ready to begin.

Traffic from Montevallo to Clanton, Montgomery, and other points south, usually takes the cut-off or short route, entering the Montgomery Highway at Shaw's Store. This route saves a few miles of distance, and is usually as good traveling as the Calera Highway. However, the cut-off has really been cut-off since the big snow. One mud hole just this side of the county line has rendered the whole road worthless so far as through travel is concerned.

Reports are that the road north to Alabaster has been in a very bad condition, due to the ravages of the winter weather.

Montevallo, we repeat again, deserves better highway facilities than we have. We should by all means, have three paved connections to the Birmingham-Montgomery Highway — one to Calera, one to Shaw's Store, and one to Alabaster.

Then, of course, the road to Centreville should be paved, and not only that part adjacent to Montevallo, but the whole of State Highway 45 from Tuscaloosa to Sylacauga.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN HELPING POOR CHILDREN

The Sociology Department of Alabama College is actively engaged in an effort to raise a fund which will be available for use in providing medical care or hospitalization for needy underprivileged children in this vicinity.

Since there are no public funds available in this county for such purposes, the appeal is being made by the department for contributions from friends of children who are able to give of their means.

The Children's Hospital, in such cases, will make special rates for children who are presented for treatment under sanction of the Sociology Department. Already a number of contributions have been received, and some money has been spent in an effort to relieve a child critically ill with complications following pneumonia.

Further contributions are urgently needed for the relief of several cases that are under the supervision of the Sociology Department, and will be gratefully acknowledged if sent to Miss Brooke, Sociology Department, King House, and marked for community fund.

Million Fish A Year To Be Planted In Streams

Montgomery, Ala., Feb., 17.—Closer cooperation between the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries and the State Conservation Department in the propagation of fish and the restocking of Alabama streams will be the result of the February visit to this state of Swepson Earle, former Conservation Commissioner of Maryland and now liaison officer for the Fisheries Bureau.

This coordination of federal and state fishery programs is designed to eliminate duplication of effort and is expected to result in the planting of approximately a million fish a year in the streams of Alabama from the Federal hatchery at Marion. This was the output estimated by Mr. Earle after a visit to the hatchery.

He found that 31 of the 51 rearing ponds at the hatchery have produced more than 700,000 fish for planting purposes during the current year and he believes that the 100 acres of pond space at the hatchery is capable of producing a million to a million and a half fish annually.

Of this year's total output, 81,600 bream and 9,410 bass were distributed through the Conservation Department and Mr. Earle stated an dditional 30,000 either are in the process of being planted or will be distributed in the near future.

"Coordination of the efforts of the Fisheries Bureau with those of the State Conservation Commissions will tend to eliminate duplication," explained Mr. Earle. "This means that we will not place fish in streams until requests have been referred to your department and checked to avoid any duplication in restocking of the streams."

Since last July Mr. Earle has visited 30 states and traveled approximately 16,000 miles on his contact tour and survey of Bureau stations, of which there are 87. He said he found the state commissions eager and willing to cooperate in the Bureau's program, but said he found no finer cooperative spirit than that existing in Alabama.

Following his visit to the Marion hatchery, Mr. Earle conferred with the Alabama Oyster Commission in Montgomery and later visited the state oyster beds on the coast. He said Alabama had some valuable waters which should produce excellent oysters. He was keenly interested in the state's present oyster rehabilitation project.

CIVIC CLUB NOTES

The regular meeting of the Montevallo Civic Club was held at the Baptist Church Wednesday noon. Dr. A. W. Vughan, vice-president of the club, presided, in the absence of Dr. F. B. Pearson, president.

A committee composed of Lucien Giddens, chairman, L. E. Shaw, and Eddie Watson, reported a resolution supporting a constitutional amendment in Alabama, that will place education on a parity with all other functions of the state government in the matter of proration of state funds. The resolution was adopted with instructions to the committee to furnish copies of it to the county papers for publication; also copies to the county representative, our senator, and to Governor Graves.

Dr. M. L. Orr, chairman of the program committee, introduced as guest speaker for the meeting, Dr. C. B. Smith, of the Division of Instruction, State Department of Education. Dr. Smith deeply impressed his audience with a most interesting exposition of the trends in present - day teaching objectives of our schools.

In reply to a question about the status of the road paving project from Montevallo to Calera, Dr. J. Alex Moore reported that the survey is now in progress, preliminary to making the grades and elevations necessary before the actual work of paving begins. Indications are, he said, that we are getting nearer and nearer to our hopes that the road will be paved during the coming summer.

Everyone is invited to attend the service.

The Educational Policies Commission of Washington has announced the appointment of Dr. H. W. James, Director of the School of Education, Alabama College, as its Consultant ex-officio.

The Commission is working in connection with the National Education Association and the Department of Superntendence, having been appointed by these organizations for service in developing plans for the improvement of American schools over a five year period.

College Night Event Delayed Two Weeks

Rehearsals for "College Night" at Alabama College have been discontinued until March 2, the program having been postponed from February 21 and 22 until Friday and Satusday, March 6 and 7.

In making the postponement, on account of the prevalence of influenza in some sections of the state and to some extent on the campus, it was felt by the Administration that a better attendance on the part of students, faculty and visitors would be possible. The program annually draws approximately 3,000 people, making it necessary to devote two evenings to its presentation.

The program includes sixteen numbers, prepared and to be presented entirely through student initiative. A decision between the two divisions of the student body, the Purples and the Golds, will be rendered by five judges on the basis of songs, stunts, impersonations and toasts.

Miss Isabel Henderson, Mobile, will preside as president of the Student Government Association. The College Night leaders are Misses Helen Hewell, Mobile; Mary Nall Kendrick, Selma; Aileen Holley, Northport, and Billie Hill, Siluria.

This is the seventeenth annual College Night and it is expected to bring an unusually large number of alumnae and other guests to the campus. It will begin at 7:30 each evening and will be held in Palmer Hall. Admission is fifty cents.

Change In Time For Methodist Services

The morning services of the Montevallo Methodist Church, starting with Sunday, March 1, will begin at 10:45 o'clock, instead of at 11:00 as at present. This change will enable the Sunday school classes for college students to meet from 12:00 to 12:30 in more satisfactory class rooms than are available at the regular Sunday School hour.

The other departments of the Sunday school will meet at 9:45 with the high school classes using the main auditorium and the adults and children their regular rooms on the ground floor.

This plan of providing for two sections of the Sunday school is used in many college churches, especially where the Sunday school has outgrown the church building.

COLLEGE RADIO PROGRAM

The Alabama College Radio Program over Station WAPI, Birmingham was given Sunday afternoon from 3 to 3:30 o'clock. The program consisted of the following: Two interviews between Misses Lynette Carter, Repton and Evangeline Smith, Lineville, "On Trends in Alabama Agriculture," and between Misses Juanita Howell, Mobile and Annabel Hopkins, Bel Air, Maryland, on "Trends in Alabama Industry."

A group of vocal selections by Miss Mary Newman Graves, Waverly, a talk prepared by Miss Mary Scarbrough, Eastaboga, read by Miss Miriam Dunn, Deatsville on "Reforms in Alabama Government Proposed by Brookings Institution" and a talk by Miss Delia Beech, Montgomery, on "Reforms Accomplished in Alabama Since 1932."

Alabama Press Group Planning Trip To Cuba

The Alabama Press Association is to make a trip to Havana, Cuba, in June and all the arrngements are complete for a wonderful trip. The party will leave Montgomery on the morning of June 24th, will reach Tampa that afternoon and board the steamer "Cuba", for a 24-hour water trip to Havana, reaching the latter city Monday afternoon. Four nights and nearly four days in this most marvelous city will be filled with sight seeing and various entertainments, which are now oeing planned by the various organizations of Cuba. The party will sail Friday and reach Montgomery again on Saturday night.

The trip is to be made available for many friends of the press, and they will be able to take advantage of the very low rates which have been made. The details have been figured out and for the sum of $73.15 one may make the trip. This will cover all transportation from Montgomery back to Montgomery, every meal while on the train, the boat and in Havana, the hotel and two very interesting sightseeing trips. Even the transfer of the baggage is taken care of in this all-expense trip to the "Paris of the Western world."

Gov. and Mrs. Bibb Graves and other notables will be members of the party and their presence assures a semi-official atmosphere that will open many doors that the average tourist could not hope to enter, and will provide entertainment that will be most interesting and enjoyable.

Cuba has a delightful climate in the summer and those who are interested in going with the Press Association would do well to see the editor of their ocal paper and get full information and make their reservations.

Easter Seal Sale For Cripple Children

MISS PRUITT WILL CALL MEETING IN MONTEVALLO IN MARCH

Miss Annie Louise Pruitt, director of the Shelby County Department of Public Welfare, reports the meeting of a number of citizens composing the Easter Seal Sale Committee, at Columbiana on February 5. Miss Thelma McGinty, assistant supervisor of cripple children's service, state department of Education, was present at the meeting, and gave a splendid history of the development of the cripple children's program in the state. She stated the governor has proclaimed April 5th to 12th as Cripple Children's Week, and the seals will be sold from April 1st through 12th.

Miss Pruitt points out that the plan provides that 70 per cent of the proceeds from the seal sale will remain in Shelby County to be used in providing treatment for crippde children. Thirty per cent will be sent to the State Department.

Shelby County requested 30,000 seals, which is one seal per person for the population of the county. The part of the sales which remains for local work in the county will be matched by state and federal funds.

Following is the list of persons who attended the meeting in Columbiana February 5th:

Miss Mary Elizabeth Nolen, Home Demonstration Agent; Hon. Leon Walker, Probate Judge; Prof. J. L. Appleton, County Superintendent of Education; Mr. John M. Lyon, Chairman of the County Board of Revenue; Mr. Luther Fowler, Tax Assessor and Editor of The Shelby County Reporter; Mr. Reece Woolley, President of Shelby County Trades Council; Dr. Hugh C. Nickson, County Health Officer; Miss Nell Davidson, County Nurse; Mr. W. H. Pope, Chairman of Public Welfare Board; Mr. James Leonard, Boy Scout Leader; Mr. A. A. Lauderdale, County Farm Agent; Miss Annie Louise Pruitt, director Department of Public Welfare.

Mr. J. M. Lyon was elected chairman; Mr. Luther Fowler, publicity director; Mr. A. A. Lauderdale, treasurer.

Miss Pruitt states that another meeting will be held at Montevallo during the early part of March, in furtherance of the campaign to sell seals for aid of the cripple children.

Civic Club Favors Community Chest

RESOLUTION AND RECOMMENDATIONS APPROVED AT A RECENT MEETING

Miss Annie Louise Pruitt, director of the Shelby County Department of Public Welfare, has released to us for publication a report and recommendation of the Montevallo Civic Club, regarding a plan for a county welfare organization.

This recommendation was made by a special committee of the club, composed of Dr. T. H. Napier, Mr. Z. S. Cowart, and Dr. A. W. Vaughan. It was presented by the committee at a recent meeting of the Club and adopted by vote of the membership.

Following is the resolution:

"We recommend that the Civic Club, through its Secretary, advise the County Welfare Board that we believe a supplementary countywide welfare organization on a voluntary basis is desirable. We would like to suggest further that the Welfare Board issue a call to all 21 beats of the county for interested citizens to meet in Columbiana at an early date for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization. We suggest also that this organization follow the general lines of the County Community Chest set up several years ago, with such adjustments to the present welfare program of the State as may be deemed advisable. Finally, we pledge cooperation of the Civic Club in promoting the program of this organization."

IS IT CHEAPER TO LIVE IN THE SOUTH

The Montevallo Times acknowledges with due appreciation the compilation of some interesting facts and statistics by a friend who denominates himself as "John Q. Citizen," upon the subject of the question, "Does it cost less to live in the South?"

We are glad to give space to his article which is commended to the attention of many who will be interested in the comparisons made and the facts revealed in this study.

Because we frequently hear it alleged in justification of wage and cost differentials between the North and South, that it costs less to live in the South, the southern citizen ought to be acquainted with the best analyses in this field and he ought to know that there is a big fallacy in this lower-cost argument. One of the keenest statistical sociologists in this country, himself a native Georgian though now with the University of Chicago, has published in the December, 1935, Social Forces a study which has embraced thirty-three non-southern cities and thirteen southern cities including Atlanta, Birmingham, Charlotte, New Orleans, and others of our largest communities. This statistician, Dr. W. F. Ogburn, rather effectively punctures the popular notion.

In the first place, the fact that the southerner spends less than the northerner usually means that his income is less than the northerner's. If the same salary were received in each region, a year's expenditure might be the same, provided life in cities of the same size were compared and not life in a small town with life in a metropolis, as is usually done.

In the second place there is what might be termed the market-basket fallacy, namely comparing in the south and in the north the prices of a huge basket of goods, all that a family needed to have. The results of such comparisons show little or no difference between the regions. The trouble with this method, however, is that the goods in the basket priced are not used alike in both regions, hence the comparisons are to that extent artificial. Thus, more corn bread is eaten in the South and more wheat bread in the West and East. More ice is used in the South and less coal. Fewer servants are used in the North and more mechanical appliances, and son on.

Dr. Ogburn presents figures showing what food costs a family of husband, wife and three children, aged 2, 7 and 11 years with a yearly income of $1,300. For the thirteen southern cities the average cost of food for such families was found to be $537; for the thirty-three non-southern cities, $540. These data show no significant difference between the South and the rest of the United States.

After exacting statistical considerations, allowance for error, and so forth, it is found that a difference of only four-tenths of one cent exists between the South and the other regions in percentages of incomes spent for food. In other words, less than half a cent in the dollar's worth. And so, Dr. Ogburn ends his discriminating analysis with this statement: "The popular notion that it is cheaper to live in the South is based upon false comparisons or unsatisfactory concepts. If a laborer spends less in the South than in the North, it is because he gets less in wages and not because it costs less to live there."

One might proceed to enlarge upon some of the penalties of enforced living on less. Pellagra is present in the South and non-existent in the North. The three M's of meat, meal and molasses have their parallels in the meagreness of the three R's, the meagre diet of readin' ritin' and rithmetic. This living on less and less develops a truy vicious cycle of more and more satisfaction with less and less; taste is dulled, vision is dimmed, horizons shrink. The ex-ploiter from without and the politician from within have long enough played with the idea that the South, its families, and its schools could "get along"; we want to move onward and upward into wider fields of enrichment, where everybody, but especially our children, will have the chance to lay hold on the best that life has to offer. Why should we be content with meagreness? The citizens have the power to demand what they ought to have.

BOUQUET FOR PETE JARMAN

"The retirement of the veteran Congressman Oliver indicates that Pete Jarman will go to Washington. Mr. Jarman ran a close second to Mr. Oliver two years ago. Anyone that could give "Buck" Oliver any kind of opposition has to be considered as a dangerous opponent. We are ot meddling in politics outside of our own bailiwick, but we'll put our money on Pete Jarman to represent the sixth district."—From the Greenville Advocate of February 14, 1936.

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

An Interview With the Cashier of the School Bank

The Montevallo High School Bank, at the close of the last banking day, Tuesday, February 17, had one hundred and eleven depositors and ninety dollars capital. According to Fred Frost, cashier, the banking spirit has grown far beyond the anticipations of the faculty and students.

The bank was established by Mrs. Marjorie Goff Bagwell's bookkeeping class at the suggestion of Dr. M. L. Orr, director of the Training School. It fosters two functions: a practical means of teaching thrift to the student body as a whole, and a project for the bookkeeping class.

The officers of the bank are: President, G. C. Long; Cashier, Fred Frost; Assistant Cashier, Helen Eiland. The board of directors of the bank consists of twelve members, two from each class. They guide and direct the policy of the bank. Two representatives from each of the nine sections assist the officers.

Frost's reply to a question regarding the dignity and business-like manner in which the officers conducted themselves was a smiling assurance that their aim was to render true service with dignity, accuracy, and courtesy. The officers and directors were appointed by the faculty.

Each depositor has a card and a passbook. The section representatives receive the deposits in the section rooms and turn them in to the officers at the main desk located in the high school lobby. After all deposits are correctly recorded and the books balanced, the total deposit for the school is deposited in the Merchants and Planters Bank, Montevallo. At the close of each four week period the officers take their books to the accountancy office at the college and with the aid of an adding machine, check them.

So far the students have proved themselves to be stable depositors. Movies and lollypops have not induced the depositors to check on their accounts. Regardless of the fact that deposits may be checked out, only one person has checked on his account during the entire month of the bank's operation. The first deposit made was by the youngest depositor, little Bill Tidwell, the four-month-old son of W. F. Tidwell, principal of the high school.

Fred says that the pupils report that their parents are giving them more money in order that they may have money to save. He feels that the bank is bringing a stronger spirit of unity into existence between parents, children and teachers.

Although Fred s a member of the Senior II class he has the poise and dignity of a Senior III. He feels that the privilege of being an officer or the privilege of working for the school bank is a valuable experience, for it makes bookkeeping a vital, living, practical work. When asked if he would like to work in a bank when he finished school, Fred only smiled. He is a rare specimen—one who is tight-lipped regarding his ambitions.—Julia Menefee.

Girl Scouts

Girl Scouts are you proud of your uniform? Do you wear it on every possible occasion? Here is what the national leader of Girl Scouts says about the Scout Uniform:

"It's smart to be in uniform." To be smartly dressed is to be suitably dressed, to have the right garment for the right occasion. Our uniforms are right because they equip us comfortably and conveniently for what we need to do while we are in them. Above all, to over one hundred million people in our United States, the uniform has become a symbol and a reminder of the fineness, usefulness and purpose of Girl Scouting. Let's all wear our uniforms on all Scouting occasions.—Sincerely yours, Constance Rittenhouse.

Weekly Meeting of Troop 2

There were 16 Girl Scouts present on the 13th of February, twelve of whom are Tenderfoot Scouts working on Second Class. We have two honorary scouts in our troop. They are Sara Henry Reynolds and Julia Rogan. We talked over various kinds of business concerning the troop. Miss Dorothy Waites came, and led us in several songs. We then played an observation game and learned quite a lot from it. Mrs. Vaughan showed us a few signaling letters. In patrol corners, we talked over what we should like to work on next meeting. After looking through the handbook we decided on signaling. We played the shoe game and had a lot of fun. We have chosen Mrs. Vaughan to be our captain. Miss Mary Agnes Curtis is our lieutenant. Mary Jean Kennerly is leader of patrol No. 1. Sara Rose Cook is her second. Evelyn Ward is leader of the other patrol while Mary Pearson is her second. Jacqueline Woolley is treasurer and Dama Wills, scribe. We hope soon to get enough girls to make a third patrol.

Billy Louise Mitchell, Mary Jean Kennerly, Dama Wills, Evelyn Ward, Mary Pearson, Billy Phagan, Bertha Wells, Edna Wells, Helen Clayton, Alice Ray Clemens, Helen Hartley, Sara Rose Cooke, Virginia Weems, Peggy Davis, Betty Crew, Bill Kendrick, Sara Henry Reynolds, Julia Rogan.

BANKERS ARRANGING REGIONAL MEETINGS

Studying New Legal and Economic Conditions Affecting Bank Management

STRESS PUBLIC RELATIONS

American Bankers Association Sponsor of Meetings as Part of Nationwide Program of Banking Development

PHILADELPHIA. Fifteen hundred bankers from fifteen eastern states met here in January in a two day conference devoted to discussions on legislative, managerial, operating and public relations problems of the banking business. This was the first of a series of meetings planned by the American Bankers Association in its nationwide program of banking development under the leadership of Robert V. Fleming, president of the association. Similar conferences will be held in southern and western sections of the country.

"It is the purpose of these working conferences to bring to association members and other bankers a thorough knowledge of the changes in banking laws and rules, provide discussion of better public relations so that there shall be greater cooperation and understanding between the banker and his customers, and to give opportunity for a survey of the problems incident to the Government's competition with our chartered institutions," Mr. Fleming said in opening the meeting.

To Help Government Quit Banking

The discussions at the conference showed that the bankers are ready to make it easier for the Government to relinquish many of its emergency financial services as soon as possible by demonstrating how their institutions are able to render full banking facilities to the public on sound lines.

Bankers generally have recognized that in times of emergency the Government had to come to the assistance of the people where chartered institutions were unable to do so on account of such conditions, Mr. Fleming said. They also realize that possibly many functions which the Government is performing are of a nature which cannot be handled by chartered institutions under the principles of sound banking.

On the other hand, he said, "we should survey all emergency lending measures of the Government to judge which of these activities can be properly and soundly taken over by banks in their respective communities."

The attending bankers devoted time to considering the Banking Act of 1935 and the many related regulations and discretionary powers under the Federal law. These were explained by O. Howard Wolfe of Philadelphia, who said he had made a count of the various places in the act where provision is made for discretionary power to be exercised by government officials through regulations.

"Confining the count only to the sections which affect practically all of us, I found there are forty-eight places where discretionary power is given," he said. "It is a problem of no mean importance, therefore, to master banking law as it is today or may be tomorrow."

Bank Taxation and Solvency

Bank taxation was discussed by Charles H. Mylander of Columbus, Ohio, who declared that "the average American is vitally interested in taxation of banks because solvency may depend to a large degree upon the way in which the taxing power is exercised upon them."

To prove his point he cited earnings figures which showed that, in the year ended June 30, 1934, "for the United States as a whole, national banks used $14.89 out of each $100 of net operating earnings, before taxes, in payment of taxes; but in seven of the twelve Federal Reserve Districts the percentage of earnings used for taxes was above the average. It was in practically these same seven districts that the greatest number of bank failures occurred in those hectic years from 1920 to 1933."

As an example of how far taxation can go, he quoted official figures showing that in 1934 a large number of small state banks paid on the average $34.20 of every $100 of operating profits for taxes. Mr. Mylander urged that there be "brought home to the average American the self-evident truth that banks, dealing as they do only in intangible property, are not proper subjects for property taxation; that the true measure of a bank's ability to pay taxes is the earnings it can make."

WHEN BANK CROOKS SHOW PREFERENCES

The American Bankers Association reports that non-member banks suffer twice the percentage of burglaries and hold-up robberies as compared with members. Member banks display a sign showing that they receive the protection of the association's detective agents, who cause the arrest of from 150 to 400 bank crooks every year, the organization, which is a non-profit body, says.

"Professional criminals often boast of having sense enough to dodge the far-reaching system of man hunting available to members, so long as there are other banks without this protection," it says. "They recognize that once on the record of the Association's Protective Department, they must pay for every crime with which they can be identified. Detainer warrants have followed them from place to place so that penal servitude for one crime would not expiate other offenses."

Senior Class Play Friday, March 20

"THREE-CORNERED MOON" IS TO BE PRESENTED AT PALMER HALL

"Three Cornered Moon," a three-act comedy, will be produced at Palmer Hall in Montevallo, on Friday night, March 20, by the Senior Class of the Montevallo High School.

This comedy is one of the most delightful plays to arise from the depression. It is a comedy that takes you into the family life of the Rimplegars, an average American family. The Rimplegars, like many other people, were well-to-do before the depression. When the market crash of 1929 came along, they lost their money and had to go to work. Then, the fun begins.

This play was first produced on Broadway in New York. The critics were lavish in their praise of this play by new author. On the night that "Three-Cornered Moon opened in New York, the people of the metropolis and the country at large, knew that there was a new playwright to be reckoned with in the person of Gertrude Tonkonogy. Here was an author who had the perception and skill to make us forget we were looking at a play. She takes us right by the hand and leads us into the very heart of family life. For this and many other reasons, the critics of the New York papers were unanimous in proclaiming the play a cuscess. Here are some excerpts from the reviews of the New York papers:

"—speaks up brightly. Miss Tonkonogy would earn the sympathetic attention of this department by the mere freshness of her approach to her theme—never falters in her amused comprehension. An entirely encouraging evening."—New York Sun.

Miss Utterback, supervisor of English at Montevallo High, is directing the play and she informs me that this production will provide theatre-goers of Montevallo and its surroundings an excellent evening of entertainment.

The cast includes Hazel Pate, Taylor Hardy, Arthur Seale, Dorothy Warren, Mary Cobb DeShazo, G. C. Long, Clifford Fulford, Carlos Warren, Billie Ruth Fitts.

The other Senior girls will act as ushers.

Miss Dawn S. Kennedy, of the Alabama College faculty, addressed the Men's Bible Class at its meeting here Sunday morning. Her subject was "Art and Religion."

L. E. Shaw, president of the class, led the singing.

Presbyterian . Church .

Rev. Augustus J. Cox, Minister

On Sunday, March 8th, at 9:45 a.m. the Church School will meet, being directed by Prof. W. J. Kennerly, superintendent. The College Girls class will be taught by Miss Georgie Leeper.

At 11 a.m. there will be church worship. The subject of the pastor will be "That Other Gospel," which should appeal to all young people. However, it is a subject of vital interest to everyone. There will be special voice and instrument music with our new Hammond Electric Organ—"the organ of a Million tones." Prof. H. D. LeBaron will be at the console. If you are a visitor in Montevallo, be sure to come and worship with us, for there's a welcome for everybody.

The Christian Endeavor Society will meet at 6:45 p.m. Had you been at the monthly dinner, which was served last Sunday evening, you would have witnessed one of the most delightful dinners we've had yet, with the tables surrounded with students, bedecked with St. Patrick's day decorations and illuminated with candles. Following the dinner, the members and friends adjourned to the church auditorium where a most illuminating and helpful discussion took place, the topic of discussion being "Sabbath Day Observance." We invite you to come and have a part in our meetings.

U. S. ALLOTS STATE $96,824

Alabama was allotted $96,824 of federal funds today for extension of public health work under provisions of the national social security act.

The grant is part of $3,330,000 distributed to the 48 states by the U. S. Public Health Service for activity through the remainder of the fiscal year ending June 30. The act provides for allocation of $8,000,000 annually for health work in the states.

Washington officials were quoted by a United Press dispatch as saying the money was distributed on the basis of three factors: Population, special health problems and financial needs.

The morning services will be from 10:00 to 11:00, and the evening services from 7:00 to 8:00. Alabama College will hold a special conference on Vocations for Women March 11 and 12, planned primarily to serve students on the campus but open to the public. The meeting is an expansion of the annual Student Career Conference, held under the auspices of the college each summer for the benefit of high school seniors of the state.

Dr. Hallie Farmer is faculty chairman on arrangements, a capacity in which she serves the summer conference. She is head of the history department at Alabama College.

The Principal speaker at the meeting next month will be Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, director of the Woman's Work Division of the WPA. At noon on March 12 Mrs. Woodward will speak in Palmer Hall on some phase of the problem "Vocations for College Women."

Other speakers of state and national importance will come to lecture and lead discussions.

NEW DEAL FARM PROGRAM IS GIVEN OFFICIAL START

"Will Not Abandon Principle of Equity for Agriculture," Says President Roosevelt

NEW LAW IN EFFECT EIGHT WEEKS AFTER AAA DEMISE

Washington, March 2.—The White House flashed the "go" signal to the Department of Agriculture today on the New Deal's broad new $500,000,000 soil conservation-farm relief, successor to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Eight weeks to the day from the Supreme Court's invalidation of the AAA, President Roosevelt's signature enacted the soil conservation and domestic allotment act to carry on essential features of crop control.

The goal of the new law, Mr. Roosevelt said in announcing his signature, is parity, not of farm prices, but of farm income. He said the New Deal has "not abandoned and will not abandon" the principle of equality for agriculture.

More than 5,000 employees of the AAA, who have been marking time since January 6, sprang into action under urgent orders of Administrator Chester C. Davis for speed in placing the new program into effect.

Davis planned, as the first move, a series of four conferences with agricultural leaders in Memphis, Chicago, New York and Salt Lake City within the next 10 days to formulate plans to take 30,000,000 acres out of commercial production this year and place them in legumes and other soil conserving crops.

President Roosevelt in announcing his signing of the bill passed last week by Congress, said it "helps to safeguard vital public interests, not only for today, but for generations to come."

The President, in a formal statement, stressed three "major objectives" of the program which he said are "inseparably and of necessity linked with the national welfare."

They were:

1. "The conservation of the soil itself through wise and proper land use.

2. "The reestablishment and maintenance of farm income at fair levels so that the great gains made by agriculture in the past three years can be preserved and national recovery continue.

3. "The protection of consumers by assuring adequate supplies of food and fiber now aid in the future."

He said annual expenditure limited to $500,000,000 by Congress is "far less than the actual yearly waste of fertility by erosion." The act, he said, will "help to bring about and maintain a healthy supply and demand situation from farm commodities, which will have a beneficial effect upon the farm prices and farm income."

"This legislation," he said, "represents an attempt to develop, out of the far-reaching and partly emergency efforts under the AAA act, a longtime program for American agriculture."

The new law provides benefit payments to farmers who cooperate in federal suggestions for conservation of soil fertility in 1936 and 1937. It provides, also, for Federal subsidies to state setting up permanent state programs in 1938 and thereafter.

Davis predicted a delay of six weeks or more in promulgation of rules and regulations for administration of the new act and apealed to farmers, meanwhile, to anticipate benefit payments by removing 30,000,000 acres from intensive cultivation.

Who Will Help These Children?

Three orphan children living under bad conditions in this county can be given good care by their grandparents in Texas if transportation can be secured for them. Due to the break down in relief there are no public funds available. The railroads are giving special rates and an uncle has contributed $5.00. Who will help the Sociology Department of Alabama College to carry through this project for which $10.00 is needed at once?

TAX SHOWDOWN IN LEGISLATURE

PLAN TO DRIVE SCHOOL RELIEF PROGRAM THROUGH AT ONCE

Montgomery, March 2.—Scores of Governor Graves' supporters in the Legislature gathered here today to map plans to drive a school relief revenue program through the senate and house during the next two weeks and adjourn the special session.

Their caucus was scheduled for 4 p.m. The governor was still ill on the Gulf Coast and unable to return to the Capital, but legislative leaders who visited him during the week end were to outline his views and submit recommendations.

Lawrence Lee, the governor's legal adviser, and Rep. W. C. Harrison, the house floor leader, spent yesterday with the chief executive at his seashore cottage near Foley, where he has been ill of influenza for more than a week.

They came away prepared to launch a determined campaign to cut through the fog of the past three weeks and bring bills levying additional taxes to an early showdown.

In advance of the caucus, which was to be held behind closed doors, the governor's leaders declined to divulge their plans.

However, it was the accepted view that an April referendum on legalization of liquor, wine and beer, followed by a referendum in the late summer or early fall on a sales or "luxury" tax, would be the program proposed.

All pending revenue measures are set for definite action in the house ways and means committee Wednesday. Most administration leaders agree that additional levies cannot be imposed by direct legislative action.

In some quarters the impression prevailed that the governor's continued illness might necessitate a recess of the Legislature, but Representative Harrison indicated this was unlikely.

A group of legislators invited to the conference were reported ready to offer a new solution for the state's financial emergency. They held that equalization of property taxes through out the state at the 60 per cent valuation fixed by law would increase state revenues at least $2,000,000 a year.

Immediate property tax equalization, plus the proposed tax on alcoholic beverages, would produce the $4,000,000 needed to meet present appropriations in full and pull the state out of its financial difficulties, these legislators asserted.

They saw little chance of public ratification of a sales or "luxury" tax and predicted the legislature would have to come to their program eventually.

The fourth week of the special session will get under way tomorrow, with today's caucus of administrationists probably holding the key to future developments.

MRS MARIE BANKHEAD OWEN TO DIRECT CONCLAVE FEATURE

The Conclave of Alabama writers which will assemble in Montevallo June 16-20 for a four-day conference, has found since its origination 12 years ago that one of the most interesting features of the gathering is the twilight hour Round Table. Dr. George Lang, president of the Conclave, has appointed Mrs. Marie Bankhead Owen to have charge of that feature of the meeting this year.

"I have always found the informal gathering of the members of the Conclave immediately following the evening meal one of the most intriguing features of our program," said Mrs. Owen in discussing the forthcoming meeting in June. "During that hour of relaxation following the end of the day's meetings and awaiting with eagerness the night's session, the members enjoy gathering on the portico of the main building and partaking of an informal program. Led by a capable speaker, the twilight hour Round Table is an open forum in which everyone present is invited to take part in the discussions. As Dean of the Round Table for the June meeting, I am happy to announce that Col. Harry Ayers, of Anniston, editor and student of Southern literature, has agreed to lead the program on Wednesday evening, the 17th of June. Col. Ayers has selected as his theme "Current Southern Literature." The second evening's discussion will be a follow-up of this general subject in which recent Southern histories will be discussed.

One of the leaders of the twilight hour programs will be Lucien Giddens, executive secretary of Alabama College, a Rhodes scholar and well known to the radio audiences of the country through his Sunday afternoon broadcasts from Alabama College.

"One of the nation's most distinguished writers of juvenile stories is Miss Maude Lindsay, of Sheffield, Ala. One of the twilight hour programs will be given over to a story telling hour by Miss Lindsay. Miss Lindsay's stories are so simple in their narration and yet so deep in their understanding of human nature, that they are equally interesting to juveniles and to children of a larger growth.

"It has been of great interest to me," said Mrs. Owen when in Birmingham last week, "to observe the sustained interest of the people at large in the programs of the writers of Alabama in their annual conclaves. When we were first organized the interest was mainly by a small group of writers in their own work and in the work of their personal friends. With the passing of the years every field of writing has engaged our interest and many men and women who are not authors attend these conferences owing to their interest in literature."

In glancing back over the progress of the various conclaves, the broadening of our scope of work is noticeable. Distinguished guest speakers have come to us through these years and well known Alabama writers who once looked askance at the foregathering of their fellow craftsmen, now come to these meetings with enthusiasm."

"Last year the Round Table programs took a rather sensational turn at times, as men and women who are leaders in vrious social and economic life rather than writers, were invitde to take part in the discussions. It is the aim of the writers of the state to present all phases of life, not only the history of the past but the implications of present movements. Once more the twilight hour programs will afford the most exciting programs of the meeting. In addition to the speakers already mentioned we are looking forward to an additional feature which will be sun-rise meeting on the top of Mt. Cheaha where the members of the Conclave will camp during Saturday and Sunday following the close of the meeting in Montevallo. Comfortable camp arrangements are now on the top of Mt. Cheaha, one of our state parks and a good road leads to the summit. Dr. Lang is to give the sun-rise talk on some of the famous mountain top episodes in Biblical history, on Sunday morning, June 21." This will mark the beginning of a new feature of the annual Conclave of the Alabama writers in the way of a post conference trip to some interesting historical places in the state.

"We are very proud that Dr. Lang is our president this year and believe his leadership will interest a number of writers and Conclave habitues, who are the substantial supporters of literature, to attend the Conclave."

Mrs. Owen has just issued from the Department of Archives and History the quadrenially published Official and Statistical Register. Two school readers based on Alabama history of which she is the joint author, will be off the press before the Conclave meets. The greatest need of the department of Archives and History, of which Mrs. Owen is the director, is an adequate building. The Alabama Department of the American Legion has agreed to take the lead in a statewide campaign for public subscription to raise funds with which to erect the long discussed Alabama Memorial Building. This building is to be a memorial to Alabama and Alabamians in the World Wr. The plans have already been made by an outstanding firm of architects and adopted by the Alabama Memorial Commission.

"If the people of Alabama will support this movement," said Mrs. Owen, "the Department of Archives and History will then be in a position to properly house and preserve the historical treasures, records and traditions of our people, and writers of books will have a suitable place to do their research work."

Spring Creek News

Miss May Ingram has accepted a position to work at Siluria. We will miss her at Sunday School and Christian Endeavor.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Allen visited with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Allen, Saturday night, returning to their home in Ashland Sunday. His arm is much improved.

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Allen had the following dinner guests Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. J. Homer Allen and daughters, Bertha May and Elaine, accompanied by Miss Catherine Copeland, Robert and Charles Allen, of Birmingham and Mr. and Mrs. S. Fred Allen of Calera.

Mr. Will Allen and family and M. A. Evans and E. P. Frost visited J. F. Allen Sunday. Mr. Allen has been on the sick list for two weeks but is somewhat improved now.

Mr. P. M. Russell spent the week end at home, returning Sunday evening to his work at York.

Mr. Oce Williams and Miss Louise Lucas visited Sue Ingram Sunday and attended the C. E. at Spring Creek in the evening.

Miss Cyrel Busby and sisters, Cecile and Blanche, visited Annie Laura and Beonica Ingram last week.

Spring Creek C. E. met Sunday at 6 p.m. and rendered a very interesting program. The topic being the "Benefits of the Lord's Day to the Church and to Christians," led by Clara Lee, and ably presented by Mattie Frost, Irona Ingram, Adelaide Knowles. Young Williams told us what kind of members he had in his church, illustrating by the fish, frogs and turtles occupying the pond. We were very agreeably surprised when Elliottsville C. E. walked in en masse giving us a friendly visit. We had special music as follows: Duet, by Jack and Sarah Lee; Mr. Williams and Miss Lucas; Solo, Irona Ingram; and two numbers by the Elliottsville quartet, composed of Acton and Davis and the Harper sisters.

Bro. Lafollette preached a short but interesting sermon. After the benediction we shook hands with our visitors and tod them how glad we were that they came and invited them to come again.

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

Baseball

The Montevallo High School baseball team will probably start spring training during the midde of March, according to Coach Leon Hicks. There has been some question as to whether it would be wise to start a team this year as many schools have closed. There has been no definite decision yet, but it is generally believed that the team will be started.

Coach Hicks lost several regulars from last year's squad. This season he will be searching for a left fielder, a center fielder, a shortstop, a first baseman and a catcher. Although the hitting strength of last year's team was found mainly in these players, a few fence-busters are left.

—Donald Vaughan.

Basketball

The Montevallo High School basketball team went to the tournament at the new gym in Bessemer last Friday. The first teams to play were Montevallo and Mortimer Jordan. The latter won, 21 to 15.

—George Cahoon.

Our school's basketball team went to the tournament Friday. The team was defeated, but that is not a reason for our letting them down. Let's do more to help the basketball team of another year and hope that it will be the one that will do the defeating instead of being defeated.

—Orban Garrett.

The boys of Montevallo High School who are working out their tuition are very busy setting out hedges and shrubbery around the building. They are also buildng sidewalks all around the building.

Troop Meeting No. 1

The Girl Scouts of Troop 2 met on Thursday, February 27, at the Montevallo High School. Frances Bailey's patrol had charge of the meeting. We followed a trail that led to the college campus. Then we went out to find something in nature beginning with each letter in the alphabet. The judges said that Frances Baer's collection was the best. Then we sang taps and went home. — Julia Ward, Scribe.

Troop Meeting No. 2

The Girl Scouts of Troop 2 are having a contest. We listed all the requirements and put five, ten, fifteen and twenty points according to their usefulness. The one that gets the most points by May gets a prize. I must say Pat Weems passed the most tests last month. We learned how to give a color ceremony and had one. We talked about Camp Gertrude Coleman and learned that at least three Scouts are going. We hope they have a good time. We sang a very peppy song called "The Girl Scouts are Hiking Along." We learned how to play a game called "Going to Jerusalem." We had a lot of fun. Then we said goodnight.—Dama Wills, Scribe.

BANK CHARTERING POLICY REVIEWED

State Official Declares Correct Principles in Licensing Banks Are Essential for Sound Banking Conditions

PHILADELPHIA. — Sound public policy in chartering banks was discussed by Carl K. Withers, Commissioner of Banking and Insurance of the State of New Jersey, before the Eastern Conference on Banking Service, held here recently under the auspices of the American Bankers Association. He declared that "few questions bearing on the future stability and security of our banking systems loom as more important than that of a sound policy to be pursued in the chartering of banks."

Alluding to competitive policies of both state and national banking authorities to charter the most banks in the past, he said that "this country was over-banked, and that aside from any other consideration, economic or otherwise, this condition was brought about largely through an unwise, unsafe and unthinking charter policy, alternating between the state and national systems, which has marked and hampered banking progress in this country since its very inception."

Political Influence

He decried political considerations in connection with the chartering of banks, saying: "Political influence has no more place in banking than it has in the deliberations of our highest tribunal—The Supreme Court of the United States. Until this is recognized and brought into being within both our state and national systems, we may never feel safe against the shifting sands of political expedience."

As to the "element of sometimes ridiculous competition heretofore existing between the state and national systems," he said that much may be said in favor of the progress made in recent years. In many states there exists a practical working agreement between local supervising authorities and the federal authorities, whereby all charter applications are mutually considered on a basis of community need rather than competitive advantage as between systems. In some states this arrangement goes even further in the refusal of the one authority to even consider a charter while pending with the other, he declared.

Aside from the competitive and political aspects of our future charter policy, he continued, there are several others more individual and local which merit consideration. Among these he mentioned honesty of purpose, community need, the character of management and adequacy of capital.

[illegible] make reference to [illegible] and fitness" of the incorporators of a new bank, he said, continuing:

"So important do I conceive this factor to be, that I place it first among those for consideration, for unless the motive is sound, honest and sincere, there is little likelihood that the resultant institution in its service to the community will reflect other than the spirit of its founders.

The Lessons of the Past

"Too often in the past have charters been granted to promoters pure and simple—not always pure, and by no means simple. The country was dotted with such. The experience has been costly and, it is to be hoped, the lesson well learned, not only by charter-granting authorities, but the public."

Other factors to be considered as among the most important in granting new bank charters, he said, are the number of institutions already serving the area, the record of earnings of existing institutions, the number of failures since 1920, and the reasons therefor, public convenience and advantage, the reasonable prospects for growth of the community, expectation of profitable operation and whether a branch bank could serve as well.

"Sound public policy demands that no new banks be chartered unless there is a definite, necessitous and permanent need," he declared. "Sound mergers, consolidations and the sensible extension of branch banking are much to be preferred to any general movement toward a flood of new charters. But here again we must guard carefully against monopoly or unbridled branch competition, either of which might become as dangerous as the organization of new banks."

Public Confidence

Challenging a recently published statement that there is an "apparent loss of public confidence in banks," William A. Boyd of Ithaca, N. Y., asks why, if this were true, bank deposits are constantly increasing. "I maintain that any banking institution which has continued to serve its community since the trying days of 1929 must be enjoying the respect and confidence of that community, and I am sure that the very large majority of banking institutions which have come through this depression have never had to 'regain' public confidence," he says.

Trust Institutions

Texas Exposition Gathers Speed In Exhibitors' Rush

Building Program Takes Form As 5,000 Workmen Labor 24 Hours a Day

DALLAS, Texas.—Three shifts of workmen—close to 5,000 men working 24 hours a day—are rushing the Texas Centennial Exposition's buildings toward completion by the opening date, June 6.

The Exposition's own $15,000,000 construction program is well under way. The City of Dallas has broken ground on its $3,500,000 program, constituting seven permanent buildings which will form a vast civic cultural center when the Exposition is over. The State of Texas is racing work on the $1,200,000 Hall of State, one of the show pieces of the fair. The Federal Government has its two buildings—the Federal Building and the Hall of Negro Life and Culture—ready to leave the drafting room stage and become realities.

The Midway, probably the greatest the United States has ever seen, is taking a tentative form as entertainment concessionaries fight for choice sites.

Not far from the industrial exhibits—where the latest exhibits of industry and science will be shown—the Exposition two Livestock Buildings are rising.

Here the greatest livestock show the nation ever has seen will be housed.

The buildings alone will cost $400,000, complete with a veterinarians' hospital and every modern device for the care of livestock.

The value of the stock which will be exhibited here between June 6 and Nov. 29 cannot be estimated.

Paul M. Massmann, in charge of the Exposition's exhibit department, already has laid before General Manager William A. Webb contracts for more than 80 per cent of the available Exposition display space.

Included among the exhibitors with whom negotiations have been completed are:

Advance Aluminum Casting Corp., Afga Ansco Corp., Aldridge Seed Farms, Inc., American Thread Co., American Telephone and Telegraph, Ball Brothers Co., Beech-Nut Packing Co., Book House for Children, Catholic Exhibit, Continental Oil Co.

Whereas, the nation is indebted to its women for the valuable contribution they have made in the development of its democratic government and

Whereas, the business and professional women have a program to build social conditions, to adjust economic conditions, so that every person, man and woman, may have the opportunity to earn a living, time to seek health and recreation, and

Whereas, effective Democracy should bring economic freedom, attainable through that sensible distribution of wealth, through the opportunity for every adult person. who is mentally and physically fit, to earn with his hand or brains a living, that will enable them to purchase the necessities of life and to provide some safeguard against the hazards of illness, unemployment and the incapacity of old age.

Now therefore, in recognition of the achievements accomplished by the business and professional women, and the wonderful opportunities for the future, I, Bibb Graves, as Governor of this State, do hereby proclaim March fifteenth to twenty-first, 1936, inclusive, as the Eighth Annual "National Business Women's Week" in Alabama.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the state to be affixed at the Capitol in the city of Montgomery, on this the 3rd day of March, 1936.—Bibb Graves, Governor.

Tickets On [illegible] High School Play

PRESENTATION AT PALMER HALL FRIDAY, MARCH 20 AT EIGHT P. M.

Work on the Senior Class Play of Montevallo High, is progressing nicely. The name of the play is "Three Cornered Moon" and it was written by Gertrude Tonkonogy. It is a three-act comedy that concerns the depression.

Rehearsals are being held each night at Reynolds Hall. Miss Utterback, director of the play, is very much pleased with the manner in which the members of the cast have adapted themselves to their respective parts.

The fact that this play is about the depression should make it vitally interesting to all of us. It is a realistic play full of the humorous and tragic incidents that could happen to any ordinary family during a depression.

From almost any point of view the Rimplegars are moonstruck. Even an intense study of them will not reveal so much as two words of sensible conversation. In the first act, they are well off in the world; and having been spared the necessity of working for a living, they take out their lunacy in inventing complicated methods of suicide or in impulsive journeys. However, they suddenly fnd themselves penniless. Mrs. Rimplegar, having sold out the family fortune to a margin broker, puts on her wrapper, does up her hair in a Turkish towel and meanders dizzily around the house. That is why the Rimplegar children all go to work at starvation wages, and become a clan with a cause. But idle or industrious, a Rimplegar is always the same. Wealthy and liesurely living has left its mark on them and they never tamper with logic.

Tickets for the play will be placed on sale Friday, March 20. The posters for the play are being drawn by Madie Bell Ward and the advertising and business end is being carried on by Ralph Henderson. The girls who will act as ushers in the play are Cecile Watts, Irene Reid, Mary Lee Lucas, Gulmer Wilson, Dorothy Dean Hawkins, Ann Wills, Marie Orr, Annie Brewster, Lois Lucas, Laura Garrett, Virginia Haynes, Ella Ree Sanders, Ressie May Woolley, Madie Bell Ward, Celeste Mitchell, Alma Griffin, Sara Lawrence, Helen Nix, Flora Jane Abner, Gertiwyl Vinson, Clara Lee, Floice Murphy, Helen Eiland, Velma Johnson.

"Consumer Education," Program Subject This Week Business Women's Club

The Business and Professional Women's Club held its regular meeting Monday evening, March 9th. Mrs. Denson Elliott presided over the business session. A proclamation from Gov. Graves proclaiming March 15th to 21st as the eighth annual National Business Women's Week, was read by Mrs. Lena Jeter. The club voted to take an active part in the national program.

Mrs. Margaret K. Coyle, Education Chairman, was in charge of the program for the evening. She introduced the following in a panel discussion on "Consumer Education:" Vivian Booker, representing the mayor; Margaret Ellis, representing a member from the Civic Club; Myrtis Jenkins, representing the County Demonstration Agent; Mary McClendon, representing a merchant; Elizabeth Tutwiler, representing the National Consumer Council; Mildred Moore, representing education.

The discussion group was made up of students who are members of a class in economics of the home in the School of Home Economics. The speakers indicated clearly the need for more education in the selection of consumer goods so that one could make wiser selections where there are greater varieties of goods on the market.

The discussion showed also that the Federal Government is organized to serve the needs of the consumer through the consumer council in the Department of Labor, and that our community should avail itself of the service and publicity of this department.

The discussion indicated a willingness on the part of the merchant to cooperate with the patrons in better selection of goods, and a desire on his part to know more about what the consumer wants. It also showed clearly that we must promote a program of education to help the parent through this baffling age of consumer confusion, as well as educate the youth to principles of consumption that they may apply in maturity.

The discussion brought in the position of the home demonstration agent and the county welfare worker in cooperating with any constructive Educational program that affects the mass of people struggling for existence.

The discussion indicated that the time had come for the interested people in Montevallo to promote some organization for "Consumer Education."

HERBERT HALL, SON OF CODY

The Montevallo Times enjoyed a visit made to our sanctum last Saturday by Herbert Hall, son of the well-known and justly famous Cody Hall, editor of The Alexander City Outlook. Herbert was in Montevallo ostensibly to attend College Night at Alabama College, but we suspicioned his visit had also a more personal motive about which we dared not pin him down to a full explanation.

At any rate, Herbert appears to be keen and well informed on the subject of printing and publishing a newspaper. He is destined to add brilliance to the honored name of Hall in the journalistic history of Alabama.

SUPPORT THE BALL TEAM

We are given to understand by the athletic directors of the Montevallo High School that they will have a baseball team this spring, if the people of Montevallo will support it sufficiently by their attendance upon the games.

They say they have the material out of which to make a good team, and that the boys want to play. Everything is in hand for assurance of high school baseball—except the support of the people of the community.

A survey of the community's baseball spirit will be made in the next few days to determine if the support will be sufficient to warrant the effort it will require to build and train the team and carry out the schedule.

We know there are some who will be glad to support the team. Then there are those who will be indifferent until they are "stirred up" about the matter, when they will fall in line and be among the most ardent rooters.

Montevallo can adequately support our high school baseball team and enable the boys to go through a good season. We should do it as a part of our obligation to encourage the boys in good, clean, wholesome sport. Nothing can serve better in the building of youth than the universally accepted great national pastime—baseball.

Let us rally to the call that is to be made and give the movement our heartiest support.

COLLEGE NOTES

Dr. James E. Dillard, who is conducting a series of services this week at the Montevallo Baptist Church, spoke at the Alabama College convocation Tuesday at 12 o'clock on "Religious Work as a Career." His address was in timely accord with the conference planned by the Student Senate and the Career Conference Committee of the College March 11 and 12 on vocations for college women.

Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, director of the Woman's Work Division of the WPA, will speak at 8 o'clock Thursday evening; and on the preceding day at 11:30 and 3:30 Miss Shirley C. Titus, of the Vanderbilt University School of Nursing, spoke.

This conference is an expansion of the guidance program at the college and, while primarily for students on the campus, it will prove of particular interest also to alumnae, teachers and club women. This complete guidance program thus serves women of all ages and experience through its beginning in 1934 on the high school level, its expansion in 1936 to the college field and through the cooperation of club women and others not at present formally engaged in academic pursuits. Alabama College has taken the pioneer part in guidance meetings of this type in the Southern States.

Mrs. W. J. Dunaway and daughters, Misses Eva, and Ola Belle, and Mrs. T. A. Johnson spent Thursday in Birmingham.

Mr. Charles Bailey of Auburn spent the week end with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bailey.

Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Higgins of Gadsden have come to Montevallo to make their home. They will occupy one of the McConoughy apartments. Mr. Higgins will be associated in business with Mr. J. A. Brown.

"BUM" WON THE RADIO

A. E. Baumgartener had the rabbit foot in his pocket last Saturday afternoon, which worked the magic of winning for him the radio given away by Hendrick-Hudson Post of the American Legion.

The award was made in the presence of a large crowd of spectators on the Wilson Drug Store corner. Mrs. E. E. Craig held the box, while little Dorothy Chappelle, of Wilton drew the lucky ticket, which gave the radio to "Bum."

Proceeds of the award will be used by the Legion in helping carry on its program of welfare work for the needy and underprivileged in this community.

JACK HAYES IN SPRING CAMP

Jack Hayes, owner of the Hayes Chevrolet Company, Montevallo, and member of the Chicago White Sox Baseball team, left last Friday for Pasadena, California, where he will enlist with his team in the program of spring training, preparatory to another season of activity in the American League schedule.

For some weeks Hayes, utility infielder of the White Sox, was on the hold-out list, but finally reached an agreement with his boss that will keep him on the playing roster another season.

Girl Scouts

There are 87 girls in Montevallo and community enrolled in Scout Troops. All of these girls are not registered Scouts. It takes fifty cents to register a Girl Scout at headquarters, besides the passing of the tenderfoot requirements. It is easier often to pass the test than to get up fifty cents. The Parent-Teacher Association sponsors the scouting program in Montevallo, both for boys and girls. However, the work of the Girl Scouts is planned and directed by a group of women constituting "The Girl Scout Council of Montevallo." This council meets once a month to make plans for and solve problems of the various troops. The members of the council are Mrs. Vaughan, Mrs. Steelman, Mrs. Kennerly, Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Appleton, Mrs. Wills, Mrs. Hood. It is hoped that soon there will be another member which is much needed.

There are five active Scout Troops directed by the Montevallo Council—two made up of Montevallo girls, one of Junior I high school girls, one of Junior II high school girls, and one troop at Wilton. Mrs. Wells is captain of troop number one, with Frances Lee, an Eagle Scout attending Alabama College, as lieutenant. Mrs. Appleton is helping with this troop for a few months.

Mrs. Vaughan and Mary Agnes Curtis, of Alabama College, have charge of troop number two. Mrs. W. E. Thompson has charge of the Wilton troop. The troops made up of the high school girls are directed by Mrs. Vaughan, Mary Agnes Curtis, Dorothy Waites and Ann Robinson. Parents and public spirited citizens should be very proud of the Girl Scout organization in Montevallo. There probably is no town of its size in the state where the Girl Scout work is so well organized.

Please read the Girl Scout News every week so you may become more scoutminded. The more people interested in scouting, the better the program will become.

A musical program was presented at the Alabama College Y. W. C. A. Vesper Service Sunday afternoon. It included a violin solo by Miss Elizabeth Donald; organ solo by Miss Grace Marty; and vocal solo by Miss Mary Newman Graves. Miss Bonnie Lollar led the devotional.

THE NEW special Sunday rates for out-of-town calls provide an unusually low cost long distance service all day Sunday for both Person-to-Person and Station-to-Station service.

Another new feature is the introduction of a reduced night rate period every night after 7 P.M., on Person-to-Person long distance service. Formerly, reduced night rates were in effect only on Station-to-Station service, but now reduced night rates are in effect every night after 7 P.M., and all day Sunday on both Person-to-Person and Station-to-Station service.

Take advantage of these bargain hours to keep in close personal touch with out-of-town relatives and friends by telephone. There is likely some one who would greatly enjoy a telephone visit with you tonight. Ask "long distance" for rates. You will probably be happily surprised to learn how much you can save by calling during the bargain hours.

Purposes of The B. P. W. Clubs

To elevate the standards of women in business and the professions.

To promote the interests of business and propfessional women.

To bring about a spirit of cooperation and extend opportunities for business women.

To make democracy effective.

To promote economic security of men and women.

To make available studies of the employability of women.

To increase occupational opportunities for business and professional women.

To secure full participation of Women in Civic life in the community, state, and nation.

Educational Program of B. P. W.

The Economic Security of the citizenry of our country is one of the consuming desires of all thinking women. Such women know that ignorance and indifference are the two big foes to such security; and that to get these foes in leash we must educate everyone to the necessity of being informed on all issues of social and economic movement.

The Business and Professional women of our country want first of all to keep themselves informed, and then to pass on to all the people that make up the community in which they live, or work, the facts they have learned of the conditions of our times and of our people and of our American institutions. To accomplish the great task of educating themselves, this group of women have formulated an educational policy which has been approved by the club members throughout these United States. This is a policy with a long time view of our country and its people, for the present year the study groups in the various clubs are considering the following: Security of Youth, Taxation, Some principles of vocational guidance, Adult education, Better distribution of wealth, and Peace versus war.

The Montevallo Branch of the Business and Professional Women have been considering during the time since their inception a few months ago, the question of consumer education, and some of the needs of this particular locality for better buying on the part of the people as well as some of the devices for educating these people. Also the group has considered some of the legislative issues of the state at this particular time.

The Educational Program of the Club is stimulating and challenging to the membership, and it is anticipated that in the fututre the programs of this nature will hold interest for many who are not formally affiliated with the club.

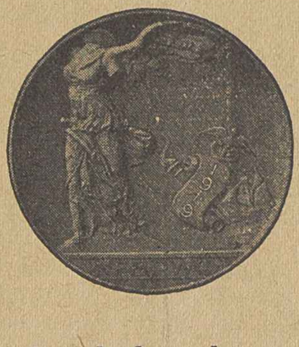
Vocational Conference at Alabama College Concluded Last Thursday

The vocational conference for students of Alabama College was concluded Thursday night with the address of Miss Agnes C. Cronin, assistant director of the Woman's Division of WPA, on fields open to women in government project work She spoke in the place of Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, director of the division of WPA, who had been scheduled to appear. Miss Cronin gave a second talk at the meeting of the Retailing Class in Home Economics on "Retailing as a Profession," speaking from her former affiliation with a leading New York Department store.

The other speakers on the conference program were Miss Shirley C. Titus, dean of the School of Nursing and professor of Nursing Education at Vanderbilt University, and Dr. James E. Dillard, pastor of the Southside Baptist Church of Birmingham. Miss Titus gave two addresses on "Professional Women" and "Nursing—an old Name for a new Profession." Dr. Dillard spoke on "Religious Work as a Profession for Women." The committee in charge of these arrangements plans to have other speakers later, including Dr. Mary R. Beard, historian and Dr. Alice Keliher, of the Progressive Education Association.

This conference, under the auspices of the Student Senate and the Career Conference Committee, is an expansion of the work begun on the campus in 1934 with the meeting for young women enrolled in high schools of the state. The third such meeting will be held July 8, 9 and 10. Both of these conferences have been pioneer movements in that they are the first of their kind to be held in the state and in this section.

The Emblem of the Business and Professional Women's Club



To symbolize the ideals and to represent their five-fold gift this emblem was chosen:

- The TORCH - for Truth.
- The WAND - for Harmony.
- The SHIP - for Progress.
- The SCROLL - for Knowledge.
- The WINGED VICTORY - for Success.

"To Further the Cause of a Positive and Lasting Peace" in World Affairs

The present purpose of the International Relations Division of the Business and Professional Women's Club is to "Further the cause of a positive and lasting peace."

In order to carry out this purpose the organization plans to work nationally for the carrying out of the suggestions set forth by the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War. Briefly these suggestions are:

1. The reduction of arms.—The women believe they may aid in this purpose by expressing nationally and individually their opposition to increased expendtures and to the use of Public Works Administration funds for arms: by becoming informed upon the findings of the Senate Munitions Investigation Committee and helping to promote a widespread understanding of these findings; and by urging upon the president and the American delegates at Geneva continued support of the plan submitted to the Disarmament Conference, which embodies a system for the control and regulation of the manufacture and sale of arms and the establishment of a Permanent Disarmament Comission.

There are also many less definite plans for the carrying out of this purpose, such as membership in the Women's Disarmament Commission at Geneva; alliance with women of other countries and other organizations who are working toward the same end; and an endeavor to work out a philosophy of national defense consistent with the Kellogg Pact.

2. Building of Effective Peace Machinery.—Toward this end the women will express to their Senators and Representatives their desire for an embargo on arms; endeavor to arouse public opinion to favor a League of Nations which will be acceptable to the United States; cooperate with and participate in the Conference on the Cause and Cure of War; promote an understanding of the work and values of the International Labor Organizations, in order that the United States may participate effectively in its activities; and foster an active interest in the World Court.

3. An Improved Foreign Policy.—The women will foster the support of the "good Neighbor policy" in the conduct of the foreign affairs of the United States. They will support the study which may lead to the working out of a more satisfactory and peaceful policy concerning the rights of neutrals. They will support the strengthening of the Department of State as an instrument of peace.

4. An Interest in the Economic Policies of the Government.—The women believe that the economic policies of the Government should be of such a nature that they will foster peaceful international relations.

In their local meetings the Business and Professional Women are discussing the problem of international relations and are putting on programs which make their entire membership conscious of the plans which the division wishes to carry out. They are meeting in small groups or in luncheon groups; they are listening to invited speakers and radio speakers on questions involving international affairs, and they are cooperating in many ways with other civic groups which are working toward the same desired end.

The International Relations Division is particularly concerned with the work of the International Federation. This Federation has done much for women in all parts of the world. It has held commercial exhibitions of women's wares, established professional schools for women, and has had a part in overcoming discriminations against women in several countries. In 1933 it held two art exhibits in Amsterdam, with women from thirteen countries participating. Two nternational scholarships have been established, one for the harp in Rome, and one for the violin in Budapest; and a Chair of Music has been established at the University of Milan for the purpose of giving women composers an increased scope for their musical talents.

Many worthwhile projects have been carried out by the International Federation. It is the purpose of the International Relations Division to bring about a closer cooperation between the National and International Federations in the hope that the friendly intercourse of women throughout the world will become a strong influence for Peace.

Magazine Presents Club Objectives

The Independent Woman, a magazine for business and professional women serves as a forum for women in the new social order. In line with ten year objective of the National Federation, it will present constructive ideas aiming toward social justice as well as news of women's contribution in many felds, widely varying viewpoints will be published, upon which readers' comment is invited.

Activities of Research Committee Under the Direction of Dr. Steckel

Research committees of the Business and Professional Women are fact finding groups assembling facts regarding local situations pertinent to any questions of special interest to women. The various local committees also hold themselves ready to assemble and make available material for the State and Nationl clubs.

During the last few years the major emphasis of the research committees has been on problems of economic security. These efforts, while they are primarily in the interest of women, actually cover the field in an effort to present facts which affect men, women, and children.

The research committees have cooperated with the educational committees in the important work of vocational guidance. Investigations have been made to learn what help is available for young people along this line and also studies of vocational guidance systems in other communities of comparable size.

Research committees have also cooperated with other committees and with other organizations in planning and settng up Career Conferences in the attempt to bring before young people of their communities facts about fields of work open to women. During the last year the clubs in Alabama through their membership have contributed "briefs" on occupations for women distributed through the schools and at conferences. They also have presented to libraries, books and pamphlets on occupations in order to make knowledge available to those needing such information.

The research committee also furnishes to the other club committees results of investigations of legislative provision for schools, relief and health and other current problems.

As a special project the local club of Montevallo has participated in the state wide study of employability of women, first by answering questions to contribute information, second, by being responsible through their chairman, Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, and Alabama College for the tabulation, interpretation and publication of the information contributed by a state wide project including information regarding 460 employable women in the state.

Charter For Local Club Will Be Presented At Dinner Tonight

Special Objectives of the Women's Club in Community Service

The special function of the Public Relations Division of the Business and Professonal Women's Club is to promote understanding and cooperation with other clubs in the community, and to join them in sponsoring activities for community interest and service.

It seeks also to create a medium of contact with all civic officers, and with them to discover and meet some of the important needs of a community.

The particular project in which Montevallo branch is especially interested is directing the women to a recognition of their civic responsibility, including a willingness to give their time and study to both national and local conditions and thereby contribute intelligently toward honest government.

Club Women Are Interested In Health

Business and Professional Women's Clubs have an interest in health problems and study the advancement of community health.

We realize that to reach the height of achievement we must have a good physique, good nerves and as good health as possible.

We are interested in periodic health examinations. In general, people do not enjoy as good health as they ought to have, but with a check-up each year many diseases may be prevented by the use of scientific knowledge at hand and many lives saved that now drift on into a condition of ill health and unhappiness.

What we want for ourselves we try to bring to others in the community. We are interested in the various phases of community health. The school clinics, pre-school examinations work for crippled children; and any agents that add to the welfare of the community in general turn to business and Professional Women's Clubs, assured that they will find them ready to do all they can to help every worthy cause.

To Educate Women In Civic and Political Duty

The legislative committee of the Business and Professional women is interested in two things. First, in educating women in the matter of their civic and political duties. Second, n promoting legislation which they believe to be desirable and hindering that which they believe to be harmful. In achieving these ends the Federation has set for itself the following tasks:

1. To urge the establishment of a merit system in government with a trained personnel for public service.
2. To support H.R. 5051, a bill to remove discrimination against married women in government service.
3. To oppose all legislation, business customs and practices which discriminate against business and professional women.
4. To work for the appointment or election of qualified women to public office.
5. To study the program of unemployment insurance.
6. To sponsor at least one piece of constructive state and local legislation.

KEEPING UP WITH THE WOMEN

It becomes increasingly apparent that Montevallo has an aggressive and progressive group of women in the organization of the Business and Professional Women"s Club—and we men folks are facing the time when we will have to do something about it.

It is natural for the men to try to keep up with the women. And if we do not miss our guess, the women in their club are about ready to give us a run for our places as recognized active and effective exponents of civic progress in this community.

We never can know what power for good there is in a properly organized and hard working group of citizens pulling for the progress of a community, until we get into such an organization and demonstrate what fruit it can bear.

There are many men who can do much in this respect, but will not do it until they see the women are taking all the glory and reward that will come from such community service.

More power to the women! If it were not for them, the world would not be fit to live in, and some of us men would not be fit to live in it.

There is nothing we would like to see better than for the people of Montevallo go out in conquest of some things the town and community deserve at the hands of those who have such things to give. We would like to see a real contest between the business men and the business women in devoting themselves sincerely and heartily toward putting Montevallo on the map in capital letters.

WELCOME TO MR. WHITE

Montevallo is fortunate in having Mr. Stanley White come to our town and engage in the hardware business. He is a good business man of long and successful experience in his line; and a man whose activity and interests will be worth much toward the progress of the community.

We perceive from our brief acquaintance with Mr. White that he is a man who will prove a very useful citizen. He talks with an understanding interest about the things a man can and should do to make his business and himself personally worth something to his community.

It appears certain that the kind of a business which Mr. White expects to conduct here will meet a ready response from the people of this section.

Leadership School Held At Courthouse

On Monday, March 9th, the first Leadership School of the Home Demonstration Clubs of Shelby County was held at the courthouse at 1:30 p.m. The meeting was called to order by Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen, home demonstration agent, who introduced Miss Annie Louise Pruett, director of public welfare. Miss Pruett made an announcement and gave enlightening information concerning the sale of Easter Seals for the aid of crippled children of the county. She showed photographs of cases of crippled children in Shelby County and how they had been improved. The out-of-town speaker was Mr. Homer S. Fisher, extension landscape gardener, from Auburn. He gave a most interesting lecture on "Landscaping the Rural Home," and following his lecture there was a free discussion concerning landscaping. He also distributed very helpful mimeographed material on this subject.

Following this the women went to the home of Mrs. Homer Walton, where practical suggestions were made in order that the women might see how these principles of landscaping might be carried out. The beautiful modern home of Mrs. Walton was also open to the club women for inspection. This they enjoyed very much.

MISS NOLEN ATTENDED AN INSTITUTE AT DADEVILLE

Miss Marye Elizabeth Nolen, home demonstration agent of Shelby County, returned Saturday from a recreational Institute which was held at Dadeville for the home demonstration agents and club leaders of Southeast Alabama. This meeting began on Tuesday, March 10th.

Representatives from the different counties were present, with an enrollment of sixty.

Two lectures a day were given, followed by a few minutes of singing and then activities. The Institute was most beneficial and it is hoped that the dfferent counties represented will reap benefits of the "Recreational School."

WILTON SCOUT NEWS

The Girl Scouts of Wilton hold their regular meeting every Tuesday afternoon. Mrs. Thompson is their leader. At present they have one active patrol. Frances Bassett is the patrol leader, with Dorothy Franks as her assistant, and Margaret Sanderson as the scribe. All the girls are very interested in becoming second class scouts.

The urge to be out in the open at scout meetings is strong. The troop has tried cooking out-doors once and liked it well enough to try it again. Of course their first attempt was not a perfect success, but it proved to be lots of fun. They plan to become expert cooks, using only utensils that they can make.

Girl Scouts

March is the 24th Birthday of the Girl Scout organization. Scouting in Montevallo is in its 4th year.

There will be a kite tournament between the Montevallo troops, March 21st.

Montevallo Girl Scouts have the privilege of attending Camp Coleman, the Birmingham Girl Scout Camp, every summer. Three campships are available for worthy scouts this summer.

Troop No. 1

The main interest in the meeting of troop number one last week was a kite lesson. Instruction in kite making was led by Ollis Mills and Jeanne Appleton. A new song was learned, old songs reviewed and games were played. Those present were: Ollis Mills, Jeanne Appleton, Maybeth Hodges, Ann Appleton, Sylvia Appleton, Frances Baer, Eleanora Reynolds, Sara Ellen Stevens, Frances Bailey.

Troop No. 2

The Scouts of Troop two played many games at their last meeting. We played a game called Sealed Orders. Mrs. Vaughan (our captain) had hidden around the room 15 sealed orders. Five of them were marked for each patrol. Some of them were: drawing an American Flag, tying up a neat parcel of books, writing out a message in the Morse code, whipping the end of a rope and tying the bowline. Some people passed tests and we are going to have a troop of Second Class girls.

Troop No. 3

Miss Anne Robinson is the new assistant leader for the Girl Scout troop that meets at 2:30 on Tuesdays and Thursday. We want to welcome Miss Robinson into our scout work. We hope that she will like it as much as we do. The girls in this troop feel rather important now that they meet twice a week. We are expecting them to make quite a name for themselves in scouting. They have two patrols. Tommie Parnell is the leader of one patrol and Delilah Booth is the leader of the other.

Troop No. 4

The members of our troop went on a hike up to President Harman's home and roasted marshmallows on his barbecue pit. Next we went over to the cabin and learned how to build a fire. It was all lots of fun. The troop members present were Opal Peters, Marie Allen, Zenoha Peters, Mildred Lovelady, Marguerite Mooney, Dorothy Dollar, Mildred Holcombe, Margaret Scott, Juanita Horton, Frances Woolley, Lorene Carden and Eddie Lee.

The friends of Postmaster P. C. Wilson will regret to learn that he has been confined to his room for the past several days with an attack of mumps.

Mr. Stanley White Has Bought Kroell Business

Mr. Stanley White, of Uniontown, has bought out the business of Mr. Pat J. Kroell in Montevallo, and will operate the store at the same location under the name of the White Hardware Company.

According to plans outlined by Mr. White he will add greatly to the stock and broaden the scope of the business, making it a complete hardware store in every respect. His line of merchandise, he says, will measure up to his slogan, "Everything in Hardware," including farm implements, paints, roofing, building material, tools, etc.

For the past twenty years Mr. White has been in the hardware business at Uniontown. He plans to move to Montevallo in a short time.

"I am pleased with the community of Montevalo and the outlook for the hardware business here," he said. "I expect to come here and devote my efforts to the support of those agencies and organizations that have for their purpose the making of a better town and community. I want to be of such help to Montevallo as I can in supporting everything that moves forward for progress and better things."

Senior Class Play Is Friday Night

On Friday night, March 20, the Senior Class of Montevallo High School will present "Three Cornered Moon," a three act play, at Palmer Hall.

Each year the Senior Class presents a play at Palmer Hall and the proceeds are used to make some improvment at the high school, either in the building or on the campus.

Miss Utterback directs the play. Each year the cast is selected about nine weeks in advance. Nine weeks of intensive practice and hard work is spent on the play and the result is a finished productoin in every sense of the word.

The play selected for this year's production was written by Gertrude Tonkonogy. After a long successful run on Broadway, it was filmed by a well-known motion picture company.

The Bama Skippers will play for twenty minutes before the play (the play starts at eight o'clock) and ten minutes between the acts.

Siluria School To Remain Open

Every child in the Thompson School of Siluria, was assured another month of school through the cooperation of the school patrons, faculty, trustees and the Buck Creek Cotton Mills management, as the school doors swung open again Thursday after a brief one-day "holiday."

The school was closed at the end of the day Tuesday, when all funds of the Shelby County Board of education for that district were exhausted.

Conferences were hurriedly called. J. A. Harmon, principal, met with J. T. Phillips, superintendent of the cotton mill, who shortly got in touch with Judge J. T. Stokely, of Birmingham, manager of the mill. As a result the mill agreed to contribute to keeping the school open another month.

Then came a meeting Wednesday of school faculty representatives, the trustees, M. G. Roy, B. V. Tucker, and S. W. Huddleston and Dr. J. A. Hines, district member on the County Board of Education. The teachers agreed to continue at work another month on reduced salary, to give the students the minimum seven months of school.

Who Will Help This Little Boy?

Dear Editor:

Thanks to the efforts of your paper five dollars of the needed ten has been contributed by four persons interested in helping the little family of three children go to their grandparents in Texas. In the confidence that the remainder will be secured we are going forward with plans for their return.

Another need right now is a setting of eggs for a partially shut-in boy whose interest in poultry raising is being encouraged as a means of getting him out into the sunshine each day. Perhaps some of your readers will help him through the Sociology Department by contributing eggs or dimes for the purpose.

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

The Senior High girls had the opportunity to hear Miss Shirley C. Titus of the Vanderbilt University School of Nursing speak on "The Successful Business Woman." Miss Titus gave many helpful suggestions on how to be a success in business.

All Senior High school attended the 10 o'clock services at the Baptist church Thursday to hear Dr. J. E. Dillard of Birmingham speak on the subject of different careers. The students were much impressed by the wonderful personality of Dr. Dillard.

The Senior III class selected three students to represent the school at a youth conference n Talladega April the sixth. It is sponsored by the P.-T. A. in order that they may discuss current problems and hear the opinions of the youth in the state.

The students that were selected are: Carlos Warren, Helen Nix, and Ralph Henderson and Frances Spivey.

During the past week, March ninth to March fifteenth, there has been a goodly number of people on the absentee list. Thursday there was a report to the effect that ninety-three students were absent and on Friday there were approximately one hundred and thirty on the list.

The chief causes of the absences have been flu and mumps. This week many are back, though still a large number are out. We hope the school will soon have its full enrollment back.

This year the Montevallo High School is having a rather difficult time in getting its baseball team started because there is not enough necessary equipment.

Last year the pupils did not take much interest in the team and did not pay to see the games. The team was forced into debt and now has no money to start with. We are asking you as pupils of the school to aid us in putting the team on its feet by buying season tickets. These will be fifty cents for pupils and one dollar each for outsiders.

Seven or eight games will be played here. You will really get your money's worth.

The following people have made the honor roll for this six weeks:

Farmers Urged to Plant Better Varieties of Cotton

Auburn, Ala., March 8.—Cotton improvement work is being done in practically all counties in Alabama through one-variety communities and farmers planting seed patches of the better varieties, reports J. C. Lowery, extension agronomist.

The importance of this work is emphasized by the fact that last year 36.5 per cent of the cotton produced in the state was shorter than 7-8 inch, resulting in prejudice against Alabama-grown cotton and financial loss to farmers. That farmers of the state can produce better cotton is illustrated by the fact that in 1933 only 8.7 per cent and in 1931 only 10 per cent of the cotton produced in the state measured 7-8 inch in staple.

Many community farm organizations have adopted cotton improvement as a job for 1936. Mr. Lowery names the following counties as some of those in which this type of work is being done: Tuscaloosa, Coosa, Chambers, Perry, Monroe, Tallapoosa, Butler, Wilcox, Mobile, Pickens, Walker, Etowah, Madison, Cullman, DeKalb, and Winston.

Farmers changing from one variety to another are advised by Mr. Lowery to do so gradually and not make the entire change in one year. He says that this can be done by farmers purchasing two or three bushels of the new variety desired and planting a seed patch with a view of producing planting seed for 1937. He gave an example of one farmer making a complete failure in 1935 because he changed seed and planted an untested variety which turned out to be no good.

R. J. Goode, state commissioner of agriculture, urges all farmers in the state to study carefully the yields and staple lengths of various varieties of cotton before purchasing their planting seed. "This is especially true for farmers planning to grow a new variety. Within recent years many growers have been sold varieties claimed to be outstanding but which turned out to be inferior. By planting this inferior and untested cotton farmers lose lots of money. In fact, many of them have learned to let the experiment station do the experimenting rather than take the chance of losing money themselves. We cannot see how any farmer can afford to take a chance of planting a variety of cotton which has not been tested.

"The Stoneville 3 and 5 and D. P. L. 11 and 4-8 varieties of cotton are recommended for the non-wilt-infested lands of North and Central Alabama," says Dean M. J. Funchess, director of the Alabama Experiment Station. "Other satisfactory varieties for the wilt free areas are Dixie Triumph, Cook 144, Cook 1627 and Piedmont Cleveland.

"For lands infested with wilt in Central and South Alabama, the Cook, Clevewilt, and Dixie Triumph have been found to be best," he advises. "The Cook 912 and Cook 2754 are good-yielding wilt-resistant varieties that will produce staple 7-8 to 1 inch in length under average seasonal conditions but under very dry seasonal conditions it will produce staple less than 7-8 of an inch."

Any growers desiring full information about the best varieties of cotton to grow may obtain a mimeographed report on cotton tests conducted by the Alabama Experiment Station from their county agents or by writing Dean Funchess at Auburn. The tests were conducted in all parts of the state by H. B. Tisdale, J. T. Williamson and E. L. Mayton of Auburn; J. P. Wilson, Headland, R. C. Christopher, Crossville and Fred Stewart, Belle Mina.

COTTON SEED

It is almost time again to plant cotton seed. Will we plant the RIGHT kind or the WRONG kind? We have in our warehouse 8_ bales_ of cotton that is under 7-8 staple that we have been unable to sell at any price since January 1st this year. Will we grow this kind this year or will we grow the kind that is MARKETABLE?

D. P. L. No. 11 is the best variety for production and staple that we know of. The best turn-out we had last year was that we ginned 1225 pounds of D. P. L. No. 11 and the bale weighed 553 pounds.

If we should have another drouth this year and the growers do not improve their seed, we fear that the cotton under 7-8 in staple cannot be sold at any price.

We have these seed on hand for sale at $1.50 per bushel. Last year these seed produced cotton of1-1-8 inch staple.

Don't think we are payingf or this adv. to sell cotton seed only. If you have seed that will produce full 7-8 staple or better, then don't buy, but if you have not, then we urge you to buy from us or someone else who has good seed that will produce a safe cotton.. Don't take any chances on short staple which very likely will not sell at any price.

Cotton Payments To Be Completed

COUNTY AGENT REQUESTS THE PROMPT APPLICATION BY FARMERS

At the request of County Agent, A. A. Lauderdale, the following is quoted from an order issued from the United States Department of Agriculture, concerning the 1935 cotton price adjustment:

"Payments provided for in the 1935 Cotton Price Adjustment Payment Plan will be made to the persons and in the amounts and in the manner prescribed in said plan except that the provisions of said plan which condition the making of payments upon the producer undertaking to cooperate in the 1936 Cotton Adjustment Program formulated under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, shall be of no force and effect.

"For the purpose of receiving applications for payments and in order to expedite the makings of such payments, said forms may be employed without alteration but shall be read and construed as if there were deleted therefrom all references to any undertaking to comply with the 1936 Cotton Adjustment Program formulated under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as emended.

"Payments payable under said plan, shall be made as soon as may be without delaying payments to producers who in 1935 operated on a farm covered by such a contract which was complied with in 1935."

Mr. Lauderdale adds that under this ruling all 1935 cotton farmers are entitled to their payment, and he requests that they make application for this payment at once in order that he may complete the work. The application for this payment is made, he says, by the man making application for the gin tickets in 1935.

Public Relations Dinner Of The Women's Club

On Thursday night, March nineteenth, the Montevallo Branch of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women held their first public relations dinner. The purpose of the banquet was threefold: to celebrate National Business Women's Week, to receive their charter from the state president thus completing their affiliation with the national organization, and to identify themselves with the activities of the town and of the county.

A short but sincere address of welcome was given by hte President, Mrs. Denson Elliott. Dr. Fred B. Pearson, president of the Civic Club, responded by welcoming the new club into the group of clubs, and wishing the members success in their undertaking.

Miss Mary Newman Graves, a student in the School of Music, gave two charming solos, accompanied by Miss Willie Glea Hudson.

The main part of the program was given by the out of town guests. Brief words of welcome were spoken by Miss Carrie Andrews, state secretary of the business and professional women's Clubs and by Miss Kate Minto, president of the Montgomery Branch. This was followed by the address of the evening. Miss Ethel Ramage, state president gave the purpose and ideals of the organization and explained in detail its plans and objectives. Then, after pledging the individual members of the new organization to their support and active promotion of these ideals and objectives, she presented the charter.

The guests attending the banquet were the members of the Civic Club and their wives, and the officers of all the clubs in Montevallo. A delicious dinner was served at the Methodist church by the members of the ladies Missionary Society. Individual favors of violets were at each place and the table was beautifully decorated with narcissi.

CIVIC CLUB NOTES

The Civic Club will meet at the Baptist Church at 12:15 on Wednesday of next week. All the members are urged to be present, as some matters of importance to the club will be considered.

Plans for Summer School Announced

ALABAMA COLLEGE WILL BE CENTER OF MANY ACTIVITIES

Plans for the 1936 Summer School at Alabama College have been announced by Dean T. H. Napier, Director, and Dr. M. L. Orr, Assistant Director. This will be the twenty-first annual summer session on the campus.

The first term of six weeks will begin June 11 and will close July 22; the second term beginning the following day and continuing until August 26. Regular courses are to be offered in the Departments of Biology, Chemistry, Physics, Education, English, History, Mathematics, Modern Languages, Psychology, Sociology, and Speech; which are so arranged that in most instances a year's work in a subject may be completed during the summer. In addition, a variety of work will be offered in the special fields of Art, Home Economics, Music, Physical Education and Speech, some of which will be given in connection with the Progressive Education program. A three weeks School of Instruction for Home Economics Teachers will be held on the campus in late July and early August.

Under the auspices of the Progressive Education Association the enlarged program of last summer will be repeated under the direction of Dr. Alice V. Keliher, who is now the chairman of the Commission on Human Relations of the Association. Outstanding educators and demon-

County Conservation Councils Are Formed

Formation of seven county conservation councils whose purpose it will be to unify all interested organizations in one concerted effort to preserve or restore Alabama's natural renewable resources to a greater abundancy, has been announced by I. T. Quinn, State commissioner of conservation.

Upon completion of the program, all 67 counties will have similar setups. Active councils are now functioning in Jackson, Madison, Limestone, Morgan, Lauderdale, Cullman and Jefferson Counties.

As these county councils are federated into a state organization they will coordinate their efforts toward a general betterment of state game and fish conditions.

"Few people realize the potential need of conservation in wildlife and our natural renewable resources," said Commissioner Quinn. "Forests, game and fish are seemingly about us in abundance. But, to the sportsman and conservationist the rapid decrease in wildlife factors is reaching alarming proportions.

"Through thoughtlessness and, in some cases wanton disregard, Alabamians are facing serious depletion of these resources in the near future unless some means of thwarting this ruthless waste is attempted.

"The county and state conservation programs, as outlined recently by the North American Wildlife Conference in Washington and which are now in the process of formation throughout the state, is the logical means of awakening citizens to a full realization of the need for conservation."

World Famous Writers to Join Staff of The Montevallo Times

VIRGINIA VALE — CHANNING POLLOCK — HUGH BRADLEY — CHERIE NICHOLAS

Through a contract negotiated with the Western Newspaper Union, these world famous writers will contribute weekly for The Times begining with the April 2nd issue.

You Will Have Bigger and Better "Times" Beginning Next Week

We are pleased to announce to our readers that beginning with the April 2 issue of The Times, it will appear in an eight page, or larger, issue each week. Through an arrangement just negotiated with the first Newspaper Syndicate in America, we have arranged for a varied assortment of features which will be printed each week, in addition to the regular local and community news The Times has been carrying.

Beginning with next week's issue Channing Pollock's latest book, entitled "Synthetic Gentleman" will be printed serially. A liberal installment of this gripping story will be run each week.

That our readers will not be forced, in the future, to depend solely upon the daily newspaper for world news, we have arranged for Edward W. Pickard, who is a world traveler and one of the most highly trained newspaper observers and writers of the nation, to write a three column interpretative review of Current Events The World Over.

Arthur Brisbane, probably the best known newspaper editor and writer of the day, and in a class by himself as a commentator on current events will write on the salient happenings of the world, under the heading "Brisbane, This Week."

Because of the extreme interest at Washington, we have arranged for William Bruckart, one of the most capable and most experienced of Washington correspondents to give the readers of The Times what the developments at Washington mean.

Hugh Bradley, a distinguished sport authority, who is on the staff of the New York Post, and who in his younger days was a nationally known baseball and football player, will write a sparkling comment sports department.

Cherie Nicholas, nationally known authority, who writes on Women's Fashions, will tell the readers of The Times just what they want to know and picture for them the garments and hats that the well dressed women will be wearing in the weeks to come.

Virginia Vale will give news of the stars of the movies and radio that The Times readers may know about the scenes in these flashing and intensely fascinating fields. Miss Vale will offer all the news highlights that concern motion picture and radio favorites.

In addition to these departments, The Times will also carry a varied comic section, containing strip comics designed to interest old and young. Comics such as the Featherheads, 'Smatter Pop, Mewcal Ike, Finney of the Force and Adamson's Adventures will appear regularly in this department.

Watch for your copy of The Times next week. Tell your friends and neighbors what they will miss by not subscribing for your local newspaper.

No longer will it be necessary for readers in the vicinity of Montevallo to look elsewhere for entertaining, instructive and informative happenings. We are going to give you bigger and better "Times" from now on.

Harry Gordon Asks Fans To Turn Out

CHILTON, SHELBY, AND BIBB TO SEND 5,000 TO RICKWOOD FOR OPENER

The counties of Shelby, Chilton and Bibb have banded together in a three way triumvirate to send five thousand fans to Birmingham for the opening day of the 1936 pennant campaign in the Southern League. They have undertaken this task simply because they enjoy clean, wholesome sport, and for the simple reason that they want to see Birmingham cop the attendance trophy this year. President John D. Martin offers annualy a silver trophy to the Southern League city which registers the biggest opening day attendance. Shelby, Chilton and Bibb think it's Birmingham's time to win that trophy.

They also are laboring under the impression that Birmingham has corralled a good ball club this year under the management of Riggs Stephenson, the old Alabama, Cleveland and Chicago Cub's star in that they are looking forward to many pleasant afternoons in Birmingham this summer, they want to give Riggs and an all-new ball club a good send-off for opening day.

Harry Gordon, mayor of Columbiana, has been named as chairman of opening day arrangements for the three counties, and Harry says he is going to have five thousand fans from the rural precincts at Rickwood rooting for Birmingham on that op-

Miss Margaret Hodo Is Community Worker

The State Department of Public Welfare, in cooperation with the United States Children's Bureau, is sending Community Workers into four areas of the state. Shelby County is one of the four counties which will be included in area number two and served by Miss Margaret Hodo. Miss Hodo will be stationed in Montevallo, but her services will be available to all of Shelby County.

Through the community worker the department of public welfare hopes to further the development of community organization and recreation.

Since only one worker will be available to four counties, the amount of time she can spend in any one community will necessarily be limited. It is hoped, however, that such organizations as the Parent-Teachers Association, the American Legion, the Red Cross, the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, and other interested clubs and organizations will cooperate to make the community worker's services as valuable as possible.

High School Student Victim of Accident

CRADDOCK HENRY WINSLETT DIED FROM INJURIES SATURDAY NIGHT

Craddock Henry Winslett, age 20, popular student of the Montevallo High School, died about 1:10 a.m. last Sunday morning, a result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident near Montevallo about 10:30 Sunday night.

Young Winslett, it is reported, was on his way to his home at Aldrich, riding on the running board of an automobile driven by a friend. Another car, in passing, sideswiped the car Winslett was on, in which he sustained severe cuts on his leg. Excessive loss of blood, it is said, was the immediate cause of his death.

Immediately after the accident Jeter's ambulance carried the young man to South Highland Infirmary, in Birmingham, where he died about 1:10 Sunday morning.

The deceased lived at Aldrich, and attended the Montevallo High School. His classmates acted as pallbearers at the funeral services which were conducted from the Montevallo Baptist Church Monday at 4 p.m. Burial was in Montevallo Cemetery.

Surviving him are his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Winslett, of Aldrich, and a number of brothers and sisters.

A large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives of the popular young man were in attendance upon the funeral services.

Crop Loan Applications At County Agent's Office

Applications for emergency crop loans for 1936 are being received at the County Agent's Office, Columbiana by Captain W. C. Harkins, field supervisor of the emegency crop and feed loan section of the farm credit administration.

The Emergency Crop loans will be made only to farmers who cannot obtain credit from any other source, as provided by regulations issued by the governor of the farm credit administration. The money loaned will be limited to the farmer's immediate and actual cash needs for growing his 1936 crops and in no instance may exceed $200 to one farmer.

Farmers are not eligible for emergency crop loans if they borrow from an individual, production credit association, bank, or other concern. Farmers will also be considered ineligible if they have an application pending with Resettlement Administration, have received assistance from that organization this year or are indebted to the Resettlement Administration for an unpaid loan.

As in the past, the security for an emergency crop loan will consist of a first lien on the crop financed. Landlord or others having an interest in the crop to be financed will be required to waive their claims in favor of a lien to the governor of the Farm Credit Administration until the emergency crop loan is repaid.

Checks in payment of approved loans will be issued by the Regional Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Office at Memphis, Tennessee.

Dr. Wilson Resigned As Postmaster Here

The announcement last week of the resignation of Dr. P. C. Wilson, postmaster at Montevallo, came as a distinct surprise to his many friends, and the patrons of the office at large.

Dr. Wilson was appointed acting postmaster here on May 4, 1933, and received his permanent appointment on April 25, 1934. He has rendered most excellent service to the public in this important position, and it is with regret that news of his resignation is received. It is understood that he requested that he be relieved of his official duties on April 1st.

In an interview concerning the matter, Dr. Wilson stated that his reason for giving up the postoffice was because he so much needs to have the liberty to devote his time to his private business affairs, which he could not do and carry on the work of the postmaster.

VACATION TRIP TO CUBA

Juan Sabates, President of the National Tourist Commission of Havana, writes the Alabama Press Association that "'Havana is preparing to extend to them a markedly cordial welcome on their arrival." The Tourist Commission is a governmental bureau, and the courtesies that will be extended the party will be unusually entertaining. An interview with the President of Cuba, dinners, luncheons, a personally conducted tour of the wonderful new capitol building, and other things are being planned.

The members of the party, whether they be editors or not, will all participate in these courtesies. And the Press Association is this year inviting all who desire to do so to go with them on this splendid trip.

Those interested are asked to get in touch with the editor of this paper for complete details how to make the trip. The cost will be only $73.70 for the trip from Montgomery. This will include all the meals, the transportation, hotel and sightseeing, as well as the other courtesies to be extended the party in Havana.

The price for children under 12 years of age will be just half the regular price, and there will be many children in the party. Parents will take advantage of this unusual educational opportunity.

So much interest has been manifested in the trip that early reservations would be wise. Friends of the press are taking advantage of the unusual offer and the trip promises to be an extraordinary fine one.

The trip will start from Moontgomery on Sunday, June 14, and will last a week, four days and nights in Havana. If you are interested in making the trip, see the editor of The Montevallo Times.

FOR ECONOMICAL CHEVROLET TRANSPORTATION

Every test proves it's more economical . . . Every Chevrolet owner knows it's more economical . . . And every person will readily understand these simple A-B-C reasons why it is more economical

The Chevrolet engine is the most economical automobile engine produced today, because (1) it is a six-cylinder engine, and (2) it is a valve-in-head six-cylinder engine. . . . Its six cylinders use less gas and oil—in fact, use the least gas and oil—because six cylinders are the most economical combination used in modern automobiles. . . . Its valve-in-head design cuts gasoline consumption still lower because there is less loss of heat through the walls of the combustion chamber in valve-in-head engines, and the advanced construction of the Chevrolet engine gives maximum heat (or power) saving. . . . Most important of all, Chevrolet's more efficient cooling system, pressure stream oiling and the greater accessibility of all working parts result in more dependable operation, over a longer period of time, with the lowest maintenance costs.

Troop No. 4

Secrets are brewing. Why are all the girls in the 2:30 Girl Scout troop carrying queer looking packages? They must be doing something different. I wonder when we will discover this deep, dark secret. We may not know the secret, but I can tell you another one (they still like Andy Gump cookies). They are beginning to realize that they can become second class scouts before very long, if they concentrate on it. I predict fast progress on their part. If you keep up with them you will have to start now.

Troop No. 5 (Wilton)

The knitting bag that isn't a knitting bag has been bulging in funny places. Wilton girls are very interested in collecting tin cans. Would you like to know why? They use them to make stoves for individual cooking. A great sport and lots of fun. The compass also has a new appeal. Its fun to learn the parts of a comass as a game. Would you like to borrow it to pass your test?

Girl Scouts

Kite Tournament

Troops one and two, made up of Montevallo girls exclusively, had a kite tournament last Saturday at the airport, located back of the college campus. There were ten contestants present. The preliminary contest consisted of everybody getting their kite in the air. The kites were then lowered and the contestants lined up and given 5 minutes to get their kites as high as possible. Sarah Ellen Stephens and Ethelle Nathews of Troop No. 1 were the winners. Messages were sent up to the kites in the air by writing them and slipping the paper on the kite string. The wind gradually carried the message up the string to the kite—a new stunt for most everybody. Two fathers were present, Mr. Eugene Reynolds and Mr. Kennerly. Mr. J. T. Bagwell, assistant Boy Scoutmaster was present, also Mrs. Bagwell. Several boy scouts drifted in as interested spectators. Mr. Kennerly made and flew a box kite which everybody enjoyed. The girls had lots of fun, learned much about making kites and are enthusiastically planning another tournament where they can put their new "kite making knowledge" into practice.

Uses Of Cotton In Road Building

TESTS WILL BE MADE BY THE BUREAU OF ROADS SOON

Washington, March 9.—The Agriculture Department announced Sunday Secretary Wallace had set aside $1,300,000 for field tests of new uses for cotton in highway construction. The new program, to be administered by the Bureau of Roads and the Farm Administration, contemplates diversion of manufactured cotton fabric for use as reinforcement in bituminous surface roads and for cotton mats to speed the curing of concrete highways.

Officials plan to provide sufficient fabric for 1,000 miles of bituminous surface and 80,0000 cotton mats for concrete roads. The mats will be distributed among projects in every state. The material will be made available to state highway commissions on their request.

Thomas MacDonald, chief of the roads bureau, recently endorsed experiments in cotton mat uses developed by the Texas Highway Commission and the department said experiments in use of the fabric had been conducted in South Carolina for a number of years. In the first instance, the cotton is used to "cure" concrete and in other to prolong the life of the surface treatment.

Lawrence Myers, chief of the cotton marketing section of the farm administration, said the cotton mats should find "widespread acceptance" not only in highways but in other construction.

"As yet, however, very few are acquainted with these mats and their rather high first cost tends to discourage their introduction in areas where they have not been tried out," he said. "To the maximum impetus to their widespread adoption in the near future, it is proposed that the secretary of agriculture enter into agreements with state highway departments to supply each highway department, upon its request, with mats for demonstrational purposes.

"The reports to the Bureau of Public Roads and the Texas Highway Department show that in addition to the low curing cost, these mats have the advantage of insuring proper moisture and temperature conditions during the critical curing process."

Myers said laboratory tests indicated the value of fabric could be determined only by using it under all sorts of conditions.

"This seems to be the most effective way," he said, "of demonstrating the advantages which South Carolina highway engineers and other observers of these projects claim can be obtained for the use of cotton fabric. Under the terms of the proposed program, it would be required that each of the three fabrics now considered most suitable for this purpose be used and that one section of the highway be constructed without the fabric in order to serve as a check as to the duration of the surface and the cost of maintenance."

SHELBY'S COTTON CROP

According to report of Mr. Gordon Mooney, special agent, the census shows that there were 5,662 bales of cotton ginned in Shelby County from the crop of 1935, as compared with 5,313 bales ginned from the crop of 1934.

HARRY GORDON

ening day. The Barons' opponents for the lid-buster offer will be Larry Gilbert's New Orleans Pelicans.

The three counties South of Birmingham have always been a "feeder" to Rickwood, even in the dayes when the Barons suffered an acute attack of "Slumpitis." Now, that the skies have lifted and it looks as if Birmingham has a club that will finish one-two-three, they are intent on sending a big delegation into Jones Valley for opening day.

Riggs Stephenson, the old Chicago Cub star, a man who once starred in football and baseball at the University of Alabama, looks as if he has lined up a winner for the Barons the coming season. The purse strings have been loosened and much money has been spent in trying to outfit a winning ball club for the Alabama metropolis.

Joe Palmisano, one of the greatest minor league catchers ever to wear the big mit, was purchased from Atlanta, and will be the Barons' first string catcher the coming season. Uncle Bud Clancy, who hit over .300 last year will be back on second base. Eddie Cihocki, a great defensive infielder, was sent to Birmingham by the Chicago Cubs and will be on second base. Eddie Moore, who was drafted from the sandlots of Florida last season, and who had a great year his first in organized baseball, will hold down the short field position. Elmer Trapp, who was hitting .340 for Birmingham when he was recalled by Pittsburgh last year, will be at third base.

As things look now old Hoss Stephenson will be in left, a youngster by the name of Luce will be in center, and Legrant Scott will hold down the right field post for the Barons.

Among the class A pitchers who are trying out for berths on the Birmingham club are Ray Combs, Joiner, Darrow, Jones, Sims and Hulvey, with Lefty George in reserve and also a release or two from the Cubs. Joe Woodard will be utility man for the Barons this year, and it looks as if they are mighty well heeled to make a one-two-three bid for a berth that high in the Southern League.

Home Mission Day in Sunday School

Our church is cooperating with other churches of the Southern Baptist Convention in observing a special home mission day next Sunday. A special program will be given and an offering for the work of the Home Mission Board will be taken.

Last year 650 missionaries of the Home Board baptized over 20,000 converts, slightly over thirty to a missionary. Three hundred and sixty were converted at the Rescue Mission in New Orleans during the four winter months, November through February. Twenty-five more were added the first four nights of March.

Baptists of the South carry on mission work in fourteen foreign countries through the foreign mission board. The Home Mission Board does work among twenty-seven nationalities in the Southern States and in Cuba and the Canal Zone.

To support this work Southern Baptists gave last year over one and a quarter million dollars, $894,614.43 being given to foreign missions and $382,908.18 being given to Home Missions These totals represent only thirty cents per capita given by Baptists of the South to Home and Foreign Missions in 1935.

The need of mission work today is indicated by the fact that in the south less than half the population are professing Christians, while throughout the world one out of four has accepted Christ as Savior.

COTTON SEED

It is almost time again to plant cotton seed. Will we plant the RIGHT kind or the WRONG kind? We have in our warehouse 8_ bales_ of cotton that is under 7-8 staple that we have been unable to sell at any price since January 1st this year. Will we grow this kind this year or will we grow the kind that is MARKETABLE?

D. P. L. No. 11 is the best variety for production and staple that we know of. The best turn-out we had last year was that we ginned 1225 pounds of D. P. L. No. 11 and the bale weighed 553 pounds.

If we should have another drouth this year and the growers do not improve their seed, we fear that the cotton under 7-8 in staple cannot be sold at any price.

We have these seed on hand for sale at $1.50 per bushel. Last year these seed produced cotton of1-1-8 inch staple.

Don't think we are payingf or this adv. to sell cotton seed only. If you have seed that will produce full 7-8 staple or better, then don't buy, but if you have not, then we urge you to buy from us or someone else who has good seed that will produce a safe cotton.. Don't take any chances on short staple which very likely will not sell at any price.

State Will Seed 4,779,000 Acres

ALABAMA FARMERS PLAN TO REDUCE CORN OUTPUT REPORTS INDICATE

Auburn, Ala.—The Alabama Extension Service Monday released a U. S. Department of Agriculture bulletin showing Alabama farmers March 1 had expressed intentions to seed a total of 4,779,000 acres to eight major crops in 1936, as compared with 4,705,000 acres harvested in 1935.

The report did not touch upon increased cotton acreage or condition as of March 1, a federal statute prohibiting the distribution of such information until July 1.

The Agriculture Department particularly stressed the tabulation of intended acreage was subject to revision due to any changes developing by reason of weather condition, price changes, labor supply, financial conditions, the soil conservation program, and the effect of the intentions report itself upon farm activities:

Crop	1935 (Harvest)	1936 (Intended)
Corn	3,391,000	3,357,000
Oats	99,000	114,000
Irish Potatoes	38,000	40,000
Sweet Potatoes	75,000	77,000
Soy Beans	80,000	86,000
Cow Peas	84,000	86,000
Peanuts	335,000	368,000
Tame Hay	603,000	653,000

The intended corn acreage as of March 1 was the only crop showing a decline, although the cow pea acreage was figured at exactly the same point as in 1935.

Meanwhile last week crop preparations moved forward throughout the state with fruit and berry crops blossoming along the Southern and Gulf shore region.

Reports brought to Auburn Saturday by county agents here to learn minute details of the new soil conservation and allotment program, indicated the satsuma and strawberry crops in the south and black belt regions had escaped material damage from adverse weather nad good yields are in prospect.

L. N. Duncan, president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and chief of the Extension Service, announced that crop and feed loans for 1936 had been made available for immediate applicants meeting requirements furnished by county agents.

Crop loans which are available only to those farmers unable to obtain credit elsewhere are limited to a maximum of $200, and none of the loan may be used for the purchase of livestock or machinery. The interest rate is 5—1-2 per cent.

The Alabama Legislature broke into the farm news picture during last week with its passage of the Walden bill accepting for Alabama all the provisions of the soil conservation and domestic allotment act passed by Congress to replace the invalidated agricultural adjustment act.

By its action the legislature made Alabama the first state in the nation to accept the new program, which Dr. Duncan estimated would add $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 annually to the farm income.

Warnings came from the Department of Agriculture that screw worms already had begun infection of Florida cattle, and Alabama growers were cautioned against its spread.

History of Montevallo Study Club

Under the excellent leadership of Mrs. Paul Rogan, president, the Montevallo Study Club has enjoyed a successful year. The officers of the club for the year 1935-36 were as follows: Mrs. Paul Rogan, president; Mrs. Presley Jeter, vice president; Mrs. L. C. Parnell, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. A. P. Heath, parliamentarian; and Mrs. Murray Fancher, reporter.

The program committee, Mrs. Presley Jeter, chairman, planned a miscellaneous course of study for the year, consisting of travelogues, play reviews and a very interesting Alabama Day program.

The Centreville Study Club has asked for an exchange program for the month of April. Mrs. F. P. Givhan and Mrs. Murray Fancher have been selected to represent the Montevallo Club. The Centreville Club has not selected its speakers yet, but they will probably appear at the May meeting of the Montevallo Club.

Child Welfare has been the main project for the year. The welfare committee, Mrs. E. H. Wills, chairman, directed a benefit bridge party at which time twenty dollars was raised. A large collection of clothing has been contributed by members to be turned over to the Montevallo schools to be distributed.

Individual members contributed four dollars and twenty-five cents toward Christmas charity work, and the club donated lights and assisted the Studiosis Club in decorating the clubs community Christmas tree.

Plans are being formulated by the Civic committee, Mrs. Murray Fancher, chairman, to foster a yearly flower and shrub exchange and to beautify the entrances to the town, the cooperation of all other clubs is being asked.

A committee, Mrs. Zettie Fulford chairman, is working on plans for the open meeting at which time an outstanding speaker will appear, and friends of the club will be guests.

Dr. E. G. Givhan made a business trip to Birmingham Saturday.

Miss Sarah Head of Livingston was the week end guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Head.

"Education and Human Welfare"

Address of Dr. J. A. Keller, State Superintendent of Education, at the A. E. A. Convention in Birmingham Last Week

DR. J. A. KELLER

Asserting that schools are closed in 46 counties in Alabama, Dr. J. A. Keller, state superintendent of education, told the A. E. A. in convention last week that the people should inform the legislators of their needs and willingness to pay.

Unless this is done, he said, action to provide funds for a 7-month school term was not likely.

"However, if a majority of the people urge the legislature to levy sufficient taxes to keep the schools open, they will unquestionably do so."

What the people of this state do with their schools determines to a great extent the outlook for the welfare of every phase of life in this state. The future of any people depends upon a sound philosophy of life and the intelligent use of the natural resources at hand. Education is the difference between the low standards of primitive civilization and ideal standards of living. It has been the training of the white man which has turned forests and hunting lands into rich farms, wigwams into comfortable homes, Indian trails into highways, waterfalls into electric power, and the then untouched mineral deposits into untold wealth. The skyscrapers here are some of the results of the training and skill of the founders of this Magic City. Ignorance did not build this city nor develop this state. Ignorance does not build; it delays, deters, and destroys. Few people will deny that schools are necessary to a continuation and preservation of the desirable development of our state.

The question facing the people of Alabama today is whether we are going to develop our state by educating our children or whether we are going to wait for other states to furnish our leadership. There may be a Lord Berkeley here and there who would be ready to thank God if there were no public schools and printing presses to inform the people; but there are schools and printing presses and a large majority of the people are anxious to make use of them in educating their children.

Why then have schools in 46 counties already closed short of a normal term? Schools have closed because of a lack of sufficient revenue. Undoubtedly the main reason for the plight of the schools at this time is that the people either do not know the facts about their schools or have not sufficiently expressed their desires for continuation of schools to the Legislature. I find, however, that most people want to know true conditions. Misinformation and half truths have confused the public. The official records and files of the school officials throughout the state carry facts, and it is our responsibility to help the people to understand them.

The school people of this state take great pride in their integrity in printing and otherwise giving out statistical facts and information which cannot be truthfully contradicted. It is natural that a profession which teaches facts should pride itself in being most accurate and honest in giving out facts about the schools. The survey of the Brookings Institution, made at the mottom of the depression praised the school accounting system as the best in the state. This survey was made by a group of experts in business and governmental administration and organization and did not contain a single expert on education. Yet it gave education first place in the state in efficiency of business and financial administration.

The Constitution of Alabama provides that "The Legislature

Miss Black Wed to Mr. Taylor in Pretty Ceremony

Beautiful in its simplicity was the wedding of Miss Lucyle Black, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Lee Black, of Montevallo, and Mr. Aubrey A. Taylor, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Roland W. Taylor, of Clanton. The wedding took place Sunday afternoon, March 29, at three o'clock in the home of the bride's parents, with only the immediate families present.

Ferns and baskets of Easter lilies in front of the high mantel formed a pretty background for the impressive ring ceremony, which was read by Reverend Fred B. Pearson, pastor of the Montevallo Baptist Church.

Bankhead Halts Talk of New NRA

NO "BLUE EAGLE" LEGISLATION PLANNED THIS SESSION

Washington — The possibility of any early move to legislate for the replacement of NRA was discounted Monday by congressional leaders.

They said recent hints that the administration still had hopes for legislation to carry out the objectives of the old Blue Eagle campaign would not materialize at this session of Congress.

Nevertheless, some members of Congress were giving increasing study to the problem of unemployment as the American Federation of Labor estimated the total was still around 12,500,000. Senator Hatch, of New Mexico, was working for a Senate investigation with a view to legislation next session.

Senator Walsh (D., Mass.) reported also there was a revival of interest in his bill passed by the Senate last session to require definite labor standards on government contract work. A House committee has been holding hearings on the measure.

Representative Bankhead, of Alabama, Democratic leader of the House, gave flat assurance no NRA legislation was contemplated at this session. "No effort is in the making at this session to attempt any substitute legislation for NRA," he said.

Campus Camp July 27-Aug. 22

News letters concerning the fifth annual campus camp of Alabama College have been sent to prospective campers. The camp will be held this year from July 27 to August 22, and will be under the supervision of Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, personnel director.

Begun in 1932 for girls between ages 10 and 18, the camp carries out many advanced ideas of modern camping. All dangers and health-hazards of out-of-doors camps are eliminated in the campus camp, while the advantages are retained. A number of college graduates work with Dr. Steckel every year as councilors. One councilor is appointed to each group of seven girls.

One of the college dormitories is used for housing the campers. All recreational facilities of the campus are at the service of the campers. This includes swimming pool, tennis courts, camp house and gymnasium. Food for the campers is provided and prepared under the direction of the college dietitians.

The camp conducts its own Sunday School and Vespers. Campers attend church in town.

County Meetings of Farmers Set

Auburn, Ala. — County and community meetings of farmers to discuss the new soil conservation and domestic allotment program will be under way in all parts of Alabama this week, Dr. L. N. Duncan, director of the Alabama Extension Service, announced Friday.

At these county and community meetings farmers will have an opportunity to study the new program and obtain information for applying the program to their own farms.

Meantime, advice comes from Washington stating that "farmers who cannot longer delay their plantings are advised that they may roughly plan to participate in the program by increasing the share of their crop land which is planted this year in soil-building and soil conservation crops such as grasses and legumes as against the share planted in soil-depleting crops. The principal soil-depleting crops are corn, cotton, tobacco, potatoes, rice, sugar cane, sugar beets, peanuts harvested as nuts, sorghums, and small grains harvested for grain or as hay. These small grains include wheat, oats, barley, rye, buckwheat, flax, emmer, speltz, and grain mixtures.

In general, to quality for payments under the program, farmers should plan their seedlings so they will have specified percentages of their soil-depleting acreages planted in soil-conserving, or soil-building crops, or devoted to soil-improving practices. The maximum limits on these percentages on which payment will be made are 35 per cent of the cotton base acreage, and 20 per cent of the peanut base acreage."

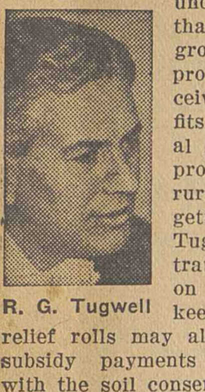
Half Million Farmers May Get Double Federal Benefits —New Processing Taxes Abandoned—Clements Quits as Townsend Plan Secretary.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

REXFORD G. TUGWELL, head of the rural resettlement administration, announced that a special committee is considering a plan under which more than half a million growers of farm products would receive double benefits from the federal government. It provides that the rural families now getting loans from Tugwell's administration to put them on their feet and keep them off the relief rolls may also receive full subsidy payments in connection with the soil conservation program now being put into operation. There are now 450,000 recipients of the Tugwell loans and the number is expected to increase to 525,000 by July 1.



R. G. Tugwell

The soil conservation subsidies are to be paid to farmers who transfer land from commercial crop production to soil conserving growths, or who resort to other "economic" farm practices. Officials said that the rehabilitation clients already are under obligation to treat their soil wisely. Before a family can obtain a rehabilitation loan it must agree to follow a farm management plan drafted by the government.

This plan stipulates that the borrower must conserve his land's fertility and grow food and feed crops for home consumption. It also includes a financial budget.

Tugwell indicated that examination may show that the farm management plan is so closely in accord with the AAA's soil conservation aims that the rehabilitation clients may already be qualified to receive the AAA subsidies.

ONE of the major features of the new tax program suggested by President Roosevelt is omitted from the measure prepared by a house subcommittee and on which open hearings were begun by the ways and means committee. For political reasons it was decided that the plan for new processing taxes on farm and competing products should be abandoned. Mr. Roosevelt's suggestion for a "windfall" tax to recapture part of the refunded or unpaid AAA processing levies was accepted by the subcommittee.

A third suggestion of the President, for graduated taxes on the portions of incomes which corporations do not distribute in dividends to stockholders, was changed to provide levies on total income of corporations varied according to percentages of profits put into reserves.

The subcommittee agreed that the corporation tax rates should be so drafted as to permit corporations, particularly small ones, to build up reserves for lean years without being compelled to pay comparatively high taxes for the privilege of doing so.

The subcommittee figured on collecting some $25,000,000 from taxes on dividends going to foreigners who own stock in American corporations and $83,000,000 from temporary continuation of the capital stock and excess profits taxes.

JUST as Chairman C. Jasper Bell and his house committee were about to open their inquiry into the finances of the Townsend old age pension plan organization, Robert E. Clements, co-founder, secretary and director of the movement, resigned. He was summoned to be the first witness before the committee, but said his resignation was not motivated by this, but was solely due to his opposition to political activities of other leaders of the organization. Dr. F. E. Townsend in Los Angeles expressed his "hearty approval" of Clements' action, and it was predicted other officials of the movement would follow the secretary's example.

R. E. Clements

Clements appeared before the committee with a great mass of records, ready to "account for every penny collected." Before testifying he said: "I have nothing to hide. I'm anxious to appear. I have been responsible for financing the Townsend plan. I have collected around $850,000 and the organization has spent about $750,000. There is still $100,000 on hand."

Chairman Bell had a corps of investigators delving into activities of the Townsendites for three weeks. He asserted that leaders of the movement have become "nervous and tense" as the investigation progressed. He promised revelations that will expose the plan as a "promotional scheme to dupe old people."

SEVERAL witnesses who appeared before a senate sub-committee declared that the Robinson-Patman anti-chain store bill, which has administration backing, would promote rather than curb monopolies, increase the cost and lower the standard of living, and decrease employment in whole industries.

The hearing was on the Borah-Van Nuys bill, a modification of the Robinson-Patman measure, but the witnesses particularly attacked the latter, which already has been reported favorable. The house judiciary committee reported the Utterbach bill, still another modification of the Robinson-Patman measure, and a bitter fight over the proposed legislation is expected.

The Robinson-Patman bill would prohibit manufacturers from making price discriminations in favor of large quantity purchasers, through advertising allowances, service charges, brokeraage fees, etc. The Borah-Nuys bill would prohibit such allowances only when they were refused to purchasers of goods of "like grade, quality, and quantity."

BENITO MUSSOLINI evidently expects another European war, and in preparation for it he announced several drastic measures on the seventeenth anniversary of the founding of the Fascist party. He abolished the chamber of deputies, substituting for it a council of guilds; and he also eliminated the country's large industries, leaving the medium and small private industries in existence. This latter move, he told the council of the 22 guilds of the corporative state, was to increase the nation's economic self-sufficiency. "When and how war will come, one does not know," he said, "but the wheel of fate turns fast."

Benito Mussolini

Mussolini asserted the large industries, particularly those working for the defense of the nation, would be formed into organizations called "key industries." These, he said, "will be run directly or indirectly by the government. Some will have mixed organization."

HAVING sent Joachim von Ribbentrop back to London with a modified rejection of the four power plans for peace in western Europe, Hitler was preparing his counter proposals which British Foreign Minister Eden had requested. Meanwhile the reichsfuehrer continued his campaign tour, delivering rousing speeches in defense of his policies. Speaking in Ludwigshafen, in the heart of the remilitarized Rhineland, he said: "Those who want us to grovel on our knees before agreeing to talk with us forget we are not a tribe of savages, but a European nation looking back on thousands of years of culture.

"I stretch out my hand to France. We want peace for common sense reasons. Germany needs no more fame on the battlefield, but is now getting ready to seek laurels in the Olympic peace competition of nations. Men who relish the indecent thought of victor and vanquished are not statesmen. They must be silent when peace talks start."

Most of the continental statesmen who gathered in London to consider the Rhineland affair went home, some of them in very bad humor over the indecisive proceedings. The French, disinclined to consider any further proposals from Hitler, were urging that the French, British and Belgian general staffs get together on plans in accordance with the Locarno treaty commitments.

FOURTEEN persons perished in Mexico's worst aviation disaster. A big trimotored plane carrying ten European tourists and four company employees crashed on the ridge between the volcanoes Popocatapetl and Ixtaccihuatl and there were no survivors to explain why it fell. Among the tourists were Prince Adolf of Schaumburg-Lippe and his wife, Princess Elisbeth.

HENRY BOYLE SOMERVILLE, aged and retired vice admiral of the British navy, was murdered by gunmen at his residence at Castletownsend, County Cork, Irish Free State. Thrown through the door of the house was a card bearing these words:

"This British agent sent 52 Irish boys into the British army in the last few months. He will send no more."

The admiral had received previous threats because of his recruiting activities.

IN CONNECTION with the signing of the new naval treaty by the United States, Great Britain and France, it was disclosed in London that the two first named powers have reaffirmed the 50-50 ratio for their fleets and again promised not to compete against each other in naval building. The new three power pact limits the size of battleships to 35,000 tons, retains 10,000 tons as the maximum for cruisers and provides no cruisers of that size shall be built for six years.

In the expiring Washington treaty there was an article regarding fortification of naval bases. This is not renewed in the new pact, and Japan requested information as to the future intentions of the powers. Consequently the United States, Great Britain and Japan were carrying on diplomatic conversations on that topic.

The new treaty gives the signatories certain liberty of action in the event of unforeseen naval activity by powers not signatory to the treaty. So far as America is concerned, this "escape clause" is taken to apply mainly to Japan.

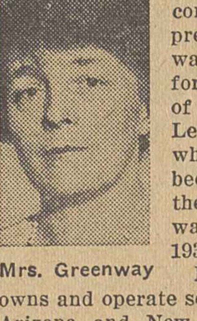
KOKI HIROTA, the new liberal premier of Japan, declared in an interview: "While I am premier there will be no war"; and continued: "We intend to cultivate our traditional friendship with Great Britain, the United States, Russia, and other powers, thus fulfilling our great mission of stabilizing east Asia."

On the same day that Hirota made this pronouncement the soviet Russian government ordered its ambassador to Japan to lodge a strong protest following a new border engagement which Soviet advices said resulted from a Japanese attack on a Red frontier post. Fighting lasted for hours, entailing loss of life on both sides, said the reports.

ONE of the big fights within the American Federation of Labor has been settled peacefully. It was for control of the building trades department. In the past building projects have been held up by strikes growing out of arguments over which of two unions should do a certain piece of work. The peace pact provides for appointment of an impartial referee to settle such arguments.

The pact also called for J. W. Williams of the carpenters to head the reorganization department, with M. J. McDonough of the plasterers as secretary-treasurer. Each has been the leader of one of the warring factions and each has styled himself as the lawful department president.

ISABELLA GREENWAY, the capable lady who has represented Arizona in congress since October, 1933, has announced in Tucson that she will retire from public life at the conclusion of her present term. She was first elected for the remainder of the term of Lewis Douglas, who resigned to become director of the budget, and was re-elected in 1934.



Mrs. Greenway

Mrs. Greenway owns and operate several ranches in Arizona and New Mexico and a hotel in Tucson, and is also interested in some mining companies. Undoubtedly she could go back to congress without opposition, but she says she wants to devote more time to her private activities.

A girlhood chum of Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Greenway has been a frequent visitor at the White House during her two terms in the house.

INTREPID citizens of scores of cities and towns in the eastern and New England states which were devastated by the unprecedented floods were digging out their homes and places of business from the mud and debris as the turbulent waters of many rivers subsided. Reconstruction and refitting began everywhere immediately, and this, as well as the relief of the suffering thousands, was aided by funds totaling more than $43,000,000 allocated by President Roosevelt before he left Washington for Florida.

Rough estimates were that the total dead in 13 states were 169; the homeless were 221,500, and the total property damage, $271,500,000. The last figure probably would be tripled if one took into account the losses from interruption to industry and trade and the stopping of the wages of labor.

As the floods receded in eastern Pennsylvania and New York and in West Virginia, the distress of the people was intensified by a severe blizzard; and in New England there were predictions of further heavy rains.

Cities along the lower Ohio were threatened as the flood waters raced down to the Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico, but they had had plenty of warning and were in a measure prepared. Of course many communities were submerged, but the residents had moved to higher land.

WITH only one change, the house passed the senate bill to continue the Electric Home and Farm authority as a federal agency until February 1, 1937, or any earlier date decreed by the President. The authority was created to help finance sales of electrical appliances.

European nations might take for their motto, "One treaty more, one more danger of war."

Italy, Austria, Hungary have a three-power treaty under which Italy guarantees Austrian independence against any attempt by Germany to absorb Austria, for instance. There is possible cause for war if any cause were lacking.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, worries about reports brought by health officers from the forests of the upper Sorocabana area. In that region, where mosquitoes are thick, explorers frequently saw "monkeys with high fevers" drop out of trees and die, dozens of them, victims of yellow fever.

Fortunately for Brazil cities, the jungle mosquito that bites monkeys and gives them yellow fever keeps away from cities. The fight against disease-bearing mosquitoes and rats would keep men busy, if they were not busy already killing each other in war.

Edward VIII, new king of England, visited the magnificently luxurious ocean steamer Queen Mary in Glasgow, then went from house to house, knocking on doors, visiting some of the worst slum dwellings in all his kingdom.

Later, talking to Lord Melchett, the king put the problem of England, this country and the whole world in these few words:

"How do you reconcile a world that has produced this mighty ship with the slums we have just visited?"

A marvelously illustrated ancient manuscript of the Koran, found in a shop of an antiquity dealer of Cairo, Egypt, was bought for fifty pounds. Heaven knows how many thousands of pounds it is actually worth.

The Koran is said to have been written by a highly educated Jew, who suggested ideas to Mohammed, the latter being unable to write.

It is possible, however, that angels, supposed to have revealed divine truth to Mohammed, also taught him to write.

Good news for tree growers, fruit trees or others. You may get rid of insect pests by hammering the trunks of trees with a riveting machine, such as is used in driving rivets in city skyscrapers.

A California inventor patented the process. This writer proposes to try it on a New Jersey orchard at the earliest possible moment. The riveting is said to loosen the insect pests, after which it is easy to wash them off with a strong spray of water, no chemicals needed. To save the tree from injury, it is probably desirable to put several thicknesses of old automobile tires or tubes between the bark and the riveting machine.

There is plenty of money in this country, billions of it, Jesse Jones will tell you, but it is not circulating, as unhealthy for money in a country as for blood in your veins.

You know the strange, perhaps true, story of a man who unwittingly passed a counterfeit $10 bill. It went through the hands of ten individuals, paid for $100 worth of goods, and came back to the man who originally passed it. He identified and destroyed it.

One hundred dollars' worth of debts had been paid, nobody was any the worse. Money is a queer thing.

Do not give "living toys" to your children for Easter presents. Many parents and friends thoughtlessly give children helpless living creatures, easily hurt—live chicks, or newly hatched ducklings.

The helpless creatures are roughly treated, mutilated, fortunate if they happen to be promptly killed, by children that know no better.

The hard-working, intelligent Swiss nation is said to be disturbed by the prospect of another war as by none other.

Every Swiss under fifty is armed, trained and ready. Even in the big war nobody tried to invade Switzerland—too much hard climbing, and the conqueror would not know how to run the hotels, even if he acquired them.

The immediate business of this country is to find some way of controlling flood waters—probably not impossible.

Thunder Over Relief

Washington.—The President's latest message to congress, asking more than a billion and a half in new money to spend on relief as he sees fit has caused political thunder to rumble again. It has brought out in the open much of the undercurrent of gossip that has been going on about political racketeering with federal funds and it has brought into sharp relief, just ahead of the spring campaigning, the fact that the federal government has used something like $8,000,000,000 under the guise of relief since President Roosevelt took office.

Naturally, the situation is immersed in politics. All of the charges that were flung at Mr. Roosevelt during previous sessions of congress when he had requested that he be given, as he was given, blank checks on the treasury, have been revived. In addition, new accusations and disclosures of petty graft and political machinations have been dug up and flaunted in the face of the New Deal leaders. More and more of these are coming to the surface and there is no longer any question that throughout the relief organization there is politics. This is true notwithstanding the strongly worded statement by Mr. Roosevelt that politics was not to figure in the administration of relief in any way.

All of this leads up to the conclusion that whenever the federal government horns in on administrative affairs of states, counties or municipalities, the organization becomes so extensive that it is impossible for those at the top in Washington to know what goes on. It is but another way of saying that the federal government ought to confine itself to federal affairs, matters of national scope instead of attempting to supersede the local governments in any function.

Charge Waste

Since we are heading into a campaign in which Mr. Roosevelt is seeking re-election, his opposition is making much of two phases of the spending and relief situations. They are stressing the waste that they charge has permeated every phase of the relief effort in the last three years as well as the waste that has taken place in the countless alphabetical agencies that Mr. Roosevelt has built up in the federal government.

The relief machinery, Roosevelt opponents claim, has been converted into a gigantic political machine, the chief object of which is to reelect Mr. Roosevelt. They claim as well that there has been created a bureaucracy that makes us, as individuals, responsible to a thousand little dictators who act as prosecution, judge and jury over our every coming and going.

All of these are harsh accusations but there is enough evidence available now to make it appear that there is, at least, some truth upon which such charges can be based.

Of course politicians will magnify all phases of every subject which they discuss. The opposition will make the crimes look heinous and the administration spokesmen will make everything look pure. Neither one is justified in going quite to the extent of the indicated trend. It seems to me that voters ought not be fully convinced by either side but that they ought to examine the picture from the local viewpoint where the evidence is first-hand.

More Politics

There are 3,071 counties in the United States. In nearly every one of them, there are a Republican and a Democratic county chairman. In many of the counties the Democratic county chairmen are trying to use the WPA and its relief setup for political advantage. In an equal number of counties Republican county chairmen are watching for and reporting irregularities. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the charges about relief being used politically will increase in number as the campaign progresses if there is ground for the charges. So, it is made to appear that the local voters will have a complete picture of conditions upon which to base their judgment.

Two recent instances where important individuals have called attention to alleged corruption and political maneuvering under guidance of relief leaders serve to support the contention I have just advanced that the local communities will have complete facts before them. I refer to the charges by Senator Holt, Democrat, of West Virginia, that the whole relief organization in his state is honeycombed with politics and the bitter attack by Governor Pinchot, Pennsylvania Republican, upon what he called the manhandling of relief administration in the state in which he formerly was the chief executive. Relief Administrator Hopkins, with the aid of politicians, has denied these charges in toto. Senator Holt called the Hopkins' denial a whitewash of his own appointees and Mr. Pinchot turned loose a fresh fire.

This sort of thing probably will develop in every state in the Union.

And Asks New Taxes

I referred to the Presidential message asking an additional billion and a half for relief. This would not have created quite so much of a storm had it not followed closely on the heels of the White House request for new taxes. The combination of taxes and an additional appropriation to be used as previous blank checks have been used by Mr. Roosevelt has enabled those who are opposed to the President and those who, while they may support him for reelection, are not in accord with some of his policies, to make public statements of their positions to a better advantage than was possible before. If they had been able only to oppose relief, administration supporters could have accused them of being opposed to the relief of destitute. To put taxes and a blank check together simply offers additional ammunition and a good many members of congress will use it before the new relief appropriation is voted.

I think there is no doubt that Mr. Roosevelt will get the money.

When Mr. Roosevelt was voted $4,880,000,000 a year ago, his opponents threw up their hands and said that "you can't beat $4,880,000,000 for re-election." Now, one hears observations frequently expressed that while "you can't beat $4,880,000,000 for re-election," it is entirely possible that $4,880,000,000 plus almost that much more may beat itself. In other words, I have attempted here to present a comprehensive analysis of the pros and cons in order to show that since politics has crept in, has permeated the relief setup, the AAA organization and other New Deal agencies, it is entirely possible for a reaction to develop whereby the vast sum of money would be the cause of defeat rather than the cause of re-election for Mr. Roosevelt.

Split on Tax Plan

Much is being made of the President's proposal to tax the surpluses of corporations. I have hitherto reported to you something of the nature of the tax proposals but there have been developments that bring the subject again to the fore. One of these, perhaps the most interesting one, is differences that have arisen between men who are supposed to be the President's closest advisers. Professor Raymond Moley, now a magazine editor, lately criticized the tax plan most vigorously in his publication. At the same time, attention was directed here to the recorded attitude of Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell. Professor Tugwell published a book called "The Industrial Decline" not so long ago and in that volume he advocated the control of capital by the "driving of corporate surpluses into the open investment market" by taxation. These two views simply cannot be reconciled and yet they came from two individuals who have been very close to Mr. Roosevelt in an advisory way ever since Mr. Roosevelt entered the White House.

Professor Moley takes the position, editorially, that if, during the depression, American industry had been stripped of all surpluses, few of even the greatest corporations could have survived. He regards surpluses as life insurance policies for corporations and holds the conviction that unless a corporation is permitted to retain funds as it sees fit, it cannot protect itself when our economic structure goes into a tailspin such as that through which we have been passing.

The difference in viewpoint of these two men shows a sad state of confusion among the "economic planners of the more abundant life," and demonstrates, among other things, that Professor Tugwell still has very great influence with the President. While we have not heard many of Professor Tugwell's speeches lately, and it is probably true, as publicly stated by the opposition, that Professor Tugwell has been muzzled for the period of the campaign, there are many things being done under Presidential orders that have their origin in the Tugwell brain. He is proceeding merrily on his way with the Resettlement Administration program, of which he is head, and has 14,000 employees on his pay roll. All of which seems to indicate that while Professor Tugwell will not make any more speeches calling upon farmers and laborers to ally themselves against "our common enemy," he is still a very effective member of the New Deal administration.

THE house stood alone on a sand dune overlooking the sea—dark, deserted, and silent, except for the swish of the rain blowing against its shingles. Wet to his skin, and shivering, the Duke struggled to pry open a window.

From his dank coat pocket, the Duke drew a cheap jackknife and a tiny searchlight.

The Duke's thumb pressed the button, and, momentarily, the ray revealed waving wet beach-grass, and a single scrub pine bent in the wind. Then, carefully, he began cutting away the dry putty that held a pane of glass. It was slow work. "Why don't I break the damned thing?" the Duke asked himself, and, a minute later, felt the unshattered glass drop into his hand.

It was easy to open the window, then, and easy for a slim and agile man to climb through. Once inside the house, he paused. Would the electric lights be working, and would it be safe to turn them on? Why not? Half the summer residences in Southampton had been opened for the season. The Duke touched a switch his searchlight had disclosed beside a door.

It was exactly the sort of room he had expected—a luxurious breakfast room in a luxurious summer residence. Most of the furniture was covered, but a gay breakfast table stood in the center, and, beyond it, was an open door to a pantry. The Duke walked through, and into the kitchen, turning on lights as he went. After all, why should they mind an extra weekend guest?

He grinned, and anyone who had seen that grin might have found it hard to mind. It was an ingratiating grin, in a pleasant, likeable face. A lean face, weather-beaten and a little boney, but with large, kind, steel-gray eyes, surmounted by a thatch of unruly brick-red hair. The Duke's trim figure stretched a tidy six feet above the worn soles of his untidy boots, but his gray suit, though worn, too, and wet, was well cut and well made, revealing square shoulders and firm muscles.

"Wonder if there's any grub," said the Duke.

Above the shelves was a cupboard, and in that cupboard were rows of canned things—each can neatly wrapped in paper—sardines, anchovies, caviar, chicken, ham, tongue—all sorts of things.

Thirty minutes later, His Grace had dined sustainingly, if not well. Half the contents of the pot of coffee still bubbling on the stove warmed him comfortably, and he washed the dishes. Then he put everything back in place, turned out the lights, and, whistling merrily, went upstairs.

At the top of the steps was a kind of library—book-lined, with doors on either side, and, at its end, windows facing the sea.

Again he touched a switch, and, this time, lights sprang into being in shaded table-lamps, doubly shaded now by winter wrappings. A fire had been laid in the grate. He lit the fire, and a cigar, and then opened a door on his right.

This was a man's room, gracious and inviting. The Duke felt the mattress drawn back over the footboard of the bed, and, sniffing a pungent odor of cedar and camphor, turned his attention to a closet across the room. A very large closet, with an electric light in it, and built-in drawers, and a cedar chest. Atop the chest were two pairs of slippers, and above it hung the only garment visible, a blue-striped dressing gown of soft, light flannel. His own apparel still clinging damply, the Duke took the dressing gown and slippers back to the blazing fire, and, standing luxuriously before it, changed his clothes.

Still neat, he carried the gray suit and the wet undergarments back to the bedroom.

He returned to the fire, stretching himself lazily in a huge, overstuffed chair. Outside, the storm was growing steadily worse. Windflung against the windows, the rain kept up its incessant swish.

In the thick of it he had been an hour before. Penniless, overcoatless, trudging along the cement-paved road from Bridgehampton, five miles to the east. On foot, he had left New York that morning just after daybreak. Jobless and flat broke.

For a month—all through April, in fact—the Duke had tramped the streets looking for "a regular job." "What the h—l makes me want to keep straight?" he had asked himself, again and again. "That's all right for guys with an income. If somebody'd started me a rubber-tired pram, and wheeled me into college, and out again into papa's office—sure, I'd run straight. Why not? Who couldn't be a knight in armor? But being a knight without armor—that's different.

Still, he had struck—reasonably, at least—in the face of what seemed almost a conspiracy of discouragement. Fired out of Hollywood for a theft of which he was innocent as an unborn babe. "All right," he had said. "I'll go East, and start all over again." He had nearly frozen in Chicago. He had nearly starved. And then he had hitch-hiked to New York, riding freights when he could. A pal had christened him "the Duke," because of his clothes, and his English, and the grand manner he had acquired in Filmdom.

New York—with those Hollywood shoes wearing thin, and that Hollywood gray suit, that had cost $125, getting frayed and baggy. Part of a jobless army in a city without jobs. He had eaten his overcoat—or the proceeds from it, at any rate—and paid the last dime for a bunk in a flophouse.

A love of books, a sense of humor, and the wanderlust—these he had inherited from an Irish father, whose name was Francis X. Gilbert, and whose proudest boast was that he came from the University of Dublin. He had died in China, nearly six years ago, leaving the seventeen-year-old boy, Barry, to fight his way from Hong Kong to Hollywood, and from Chicago to New York. He found himself on the edge of Southampton.

It was black night, and beginning to rain. A cold wind had sprung up from the northeast.

His teeth were chattering by now, and his feet squished in his wet shoes. And this house had seemed so utterly deserted, so entirely safe and secure. "Ten o'clock," said the Duke. "What's the chance of anyone finding me in here tonight? I'll be on my way again at daybreak."

Now, fed and warm, he was growing drowsy before the fire. "It must be swell to live like this all the time," he brooded, dreamily.

His head fell forward, and his eyes were closing, when he heard an automobile door slam, and, an instant later, voices and the shuffling of feet on the porch directly beneath him.

The Duke sprang up.

The breakfast room window—that was it! But not in dressing gown and slippers. "Damned fool, to take my clothes off!" thought the Duke. Who were these people, anyway, driving up to a closed house at this hour?

Well, what next? Jail, probably. And then he heard the lower door open and a woman's voice in the hall. "Maybe I can talk my way out," he thought, and started down the stairs. "Who's there?" he called, bravely.

A man answered.

"Willetts," he said. "Willetts, the butler. Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

And the lights went on.

Standing on the landing, the Duke found himself facing a party of four. Willetts, with his hat in his hand, squat and powerfully built and ludicrously bald. Another man in a chauffeur's uniform, and two women—one quite young, and the other middle-aged and stout. They seemed propitiatory, and the fact gave him instant courage.

"Is that you, Mr. Ridder?"

The question had been asked first in the dark, but now it was repeated in a glare that made every face plainly visible. The butler didn't know Mr. Ridder, then. That was "a lucky break." It would give him time to dress, and get away.

"Yes," he answered quietly. "You are a little late, aren't you?"

"Sorry, sir," said the butler. "I didn't have any idea you'd be here, sir. Your mother said you wasn't coming until tomorrow. Evans had to take 'em down to the ship—her and your father, sir. I hope you aren't going to be put out, sir."

"I hope not," the Duke replied, grinning broadly, and, seeing that grin, the four servants smiled, too.

"This is Evans, sir," the butler continued. "This is Mrs. Mulligan. Cook, sir. And Annie Jeffers, the parlor maid. If you don't mind, sir, I'll get them set, and then I'll come upstairs to report."

"Fine!" said the Duke, calculating that five minutes would get him into his clothes, and out the front door.

He was climbing the steps again when Willetts called.

"I never thought, sir. Your bed isn't made. I'll get the linen out, and have Annie up there right away.

He had scarcely got his trousers when Annie appeared with a small load of immaculate sheets and pillow cases.

"Mr. Evans is lighting the furnace," she said. "The house is that cold. I wonder you didn't think of it. But, of course, you're a stranger here, too."

"A stranger!" What did she mean by that?" Where had he been, he wondered? Evidently, not home, at any rate. So that was why Willetts hadn't known he wasn't Mr. Ridder. The Duke ventured half a question.

"Willetts isn't a stranger?"

"Of course not," Annie replied. "Nor Mr. Evans. Just Mrs. Mulligan and me. We was taken on when Madam and Mr. Ridder expected to spend the summer here, and we've been let out, I guess, when they decided to go to Germany, if it hadn't been for your coming back."

Returning to the library, trousers still in hand, Barry Gilbert encountered the ubiquitous Willetts. I'll take those, sir," said the butler, taking them.

"Oh, never mind!"

"They'll need pressing."

"I'll need them."

"They'll be ready for you in the morning," Willetts said, with a note of finality. "Did you bring any pyjamas, sir?"

Any lie would do for now.

"Yes," answered the Duke, "but, like an idiot, I checked my suitcase, and God knows what happened to the check!"

"I'll get you a pair of your father's," Willetts volunteered. "You are very much of a size."

The Duke didn't mind. It was all "a lucky break," only—how long would it last? "Mustn't over-play my luck," thought the Duke. But the real Mr. Ridder "wasn't coming until tomorrow." Why make a break for it tonight?

The butler returned with a pair of purple silk pyjamas.

"Anything else, sir?"

"No, thanks."

"I'll be leaving you then. What time breakfast, sir?"

"Oh, say eight o'clock."

"Right, sir. Good night, sir," said the butler, bowing himself out.

"Easy!" thought the Duke, standing before the fire, with the pyjamas in his hand. "Too damned easy! There's a catch in it somewhere!"

Willetts implied that he had been with the family some time. Why had he never seen the son? Or even a picture of him? Why did he take those trousers? "I'm trapped," mused the Duke.

"Or else he's no more a butler than I am Mr. Ridder. There's a lot of mighty valuable junk in this house."

It was with that thought in his mind that His Grace of Hollywood finally turned the other cheek on an Irish linen pillow slip, and dropped off to sleep.

The trousers were beside his bed when he awoke.

And all that cinema nonsense had evaporated from his mind.

He squared his shoulders, and sauntered down the carpeted stairs. Already, he felt a new dignity; a new, stiffening self-respect. The trousers were neatly pressed, and "Good morning, sir," said the butler, as he entered the breakfast room.

There was nothing "make shift" about the meal. Evans had been to town for cream, and bacon, and bread, and the Duke's courage rose with every sip of the steaming coffee.

"What's this?" he inquired, his eye falling upon an envelope at his plate.

"A letter for your mother, sir," Willetts replied. "Mrs. Ridder expected some mail from the employment agency, and places like that. She said you was to open it, sir."

Barry hesitated, then opened the envelope.

A hundred dollar bill dropped out.

"Well," echoed the Duke, with that new courage born of steaming coffee. "Well, and likewise good. I can use this."

"Yes, sir," said the butler. "A little more coffee, sir?"

"Thank you," assented the Duke. "And just one more piece of toast."

Alone in the cheerful breakfast room he read the letter.

> "Dear Mother:
> I'm returning the money. I can't keep it, and I can't go to Southampton. I'm sending this special delivery, so you'll have time to get rid of the servants, if you decide not to open the house. For your sake, I hope father improves at Bad Nauheim, but I don't want anything that comes from him, and I sha'n't write again. Thanks, all the same.
> John."

The Duke picked up the envelope again.

It had been posted the previous morning in New York, and there was no special delivery stamp.

Back with the toast and coffee, Willetts inquired, "Anything important, sir?"

"The letter?" asked the Duke, as though that had been farthest from his present thoughts. "No. I'll send it to Bad Nauheim when I write, and keep the money until my mother returns."

"What time shall you want the car?"

His Grace reflected. It was a long walk to Montauk Point. And, apparently, there was no possibility of overplaying his luck. Why should not he ride to Montauk in comfort—or, at least, to within a few miles of Montauk—and disappear there, instead of at Southampton?

"I might take a drive," he said.

Out of sight of the house, he took the precaution of burning that letter from "John." "I'll return that money from Montauk," mused the Duke. "I don't want to be hooked for robbing the mails."

This was certainly a beautiful place. "If it were mine—" And he grinned again. It was, for the moment.

Life had never been dull for him—or for his father. "Keep moving"—that was the old man's slogan. And that was all he ever kept. Barry's memories began in Pittsburg. Stranded, Francis Gilbert had tutored there. Barry had discovered that he should have a mother. The old man had never mentioned it, so his son raised the question. "I lost her," his father said.

"How?"

"In Algiers. You were born there."

Delayed Pruning Halts Grape Loss

Full Extent of Damage Must Be Known to Aid in a Larger Field.

By A. S. Colby, Chief in Small Fruit Culture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Certain varieties of grape vines have been so hard hit by the severe winter that pruning this spring should be delayed until the full extent of the damage can be told and the vines pruned accordingly. Any vines on which the fruit buds have not been killed, if properly pruned, can be made to yield twice what they otherwise would.

The grower should look upon his vines as separate individuals, and after allowing for gradations in vigor resulting from insects and diseases, soil differences and weather conditions should handle the vines in such a way that vine growth and yield of well-matured clusters are balanced yearly.

Results of studies with Concord grapes showed that if most of last season's shoots were too short and too weak to produce laterals, the vine was pruned too lightly the previous season. That is, too many nodes were left. If the shoots were so vigorous that they produced an excessive amount of lateral growth, too many nodes had been removed the previous winter.

The grower therefore should strike the balance between these two extremes by leaving enough nodes at pruning time so that vigorous shoots will grow for the following year's crop, while at the same time enough fruit is allowed to grow and mature for the current season. However, these shoots should not be vigorous enough to send out many side branches or laterals. From 50 to 70 nodes to the vine usually will be enough under normal conditions.

It also is important that nodes be left on either four or six canes, rather than on a large number of short spurs. It has been found that the best fruiting buds are found on those canes from the fourth to the twelfth node. Hence most of the best fruit will be removed and the vines will run to wood if they are "spur pruned." Several well-matured canes at least as large as a lead pencil should be left with from 12 to 15 nodes on each cane. The number will depend upon the previous growth of the plant and the size and quality of the crop.

Why Some Forage Plants Cause Death of Animals

A few good forage plants are known to be cyanophoric at some time in their growth. That is, they contain compounds that decompose to liberate hydrocyanic acid (prussic acid). When these plants are associated with sudden death among animals that eat of them, it is commonly assumed that such fatalities are the result of cyanide poisoning, says a writer in Successful Farming.

Some of the suggested antidotes for cyanide poisoning seem to be marvelously effective. Their use by experienced veterinary practitioners is to be recommended in cases of sudden and violent intoxication in which cyanophoric plants are involved. It is not, however, to be concluded that because animals revive after such treatment for cyanide poisoning that the case of illness was in every instance the result of cyanide poisoning. In other words, the recognition of a disease on the basis of recovery after a specific treatment is not usually a safe way to decide as to the cause. Abundance of hydrocyanic acid in the feed or stomach contents must be found before one can be certain that cyanide is a cause of illness. In cases of death it must also be found in the vital organs.

Fertilizer for the Pasture

A fertilizer containing both nitrogen and phosphate should be used for the establishment of a new bluegrass pasture. If the soil is medium or above in fertility, says the Missouri Farmer, 200 pounds of 4-12-4 or 4-16-4 fertilizer, or 100 pounds of sodium nitrate plus 200 pounds of 20 per cent superphosphate should be applied. On soils below medium in fertility, 400 pounds of superphosphate should be applied if a good bluegrass pasture is desired. Lime should be added to those soils known to be very acid at the rate of one ton of agricultural limestone or 400 pounds of fine lime per acre. No attempts should be made to establish Kentucky bluegrass on the poorer soils.

Water for Horses

For idle horses there is no reason why water should not be kept before them at all times. In fact, this is the practice during the summer when horses are out on pasture. The difficulty comes with working horses, who when they come in from heavy work are likely to over-drink, with the resulting danger of founder. Under most conditions, therefore, it is probably safer to water horses at fixed periods, so that the amounts may be controlled than to allow them free access to unlimited water.

AFTER ALL, WHAT DOES THE TERM PROPERTY MEAN?

Property is a house with a few feet of ground around it, minus the mortgage and the difference between what you paid for it before 1929 and what you could get for it today. It is a motor car with a dubious trade-in value and household goods with great sentimental value but which would not bring much at a forced sale.

It is a very valuable stamp collection if you could find exactly the right person to buy it. It is a number of books which you imagined were first editions but that, somehow, just miss out. It is a portrait that family tradition has always held to be the work of an old master but that leaves the art experts unmoved. It is a Chinese vase that may go back to the Ming dynasty if you could only make out what the Chinese characters on the bottom mean.

It is children that, according to law, will belong to you only a few years more, but who, in the meantime, are rather expensive to maintain in that manner of living to which they somehow seem to imagine they are entitled. It is accident insurance policies on which you can realize respectable sums by the simple process of losing an eye or an arm or a leg. It is sickness insurance policies that you can cash in upon by becoming an invalid, and life insurance policies that will become worthwhile in the event of your death.

It is, ostensibly, your soil. But, in view of all the considerations mentioned above, there is some doubt as to whether you can really call that your own.—Christopher Billopp in the Baltimore Evening Sun.

Relics of Lost Hittites Found; Indicate Culture

What is believed to be the first step toward the discovery of the lost Hittites, who appear in the Bible as a great imperial power, has been found in Asia Minor. In a 4,000-year-old tomb was discovered a Hittite statue of a bull, seven inches high and inlaid with gold. The silversmith's art is astonishingly modern, and indicates that the race was cultured rather than primitive as previously believed.

The discovery has aroused great interest among European archeologists because previously nothing had been known of the Hittites' work except rock carving and a few potsherds.

More Enterprising Than Inconsolable, We'd Say

The following inscription was lifted from a tombstone in a Paris cemetery:

Here lies Pierre Victor Fournier, inventor of the Everlasting Lamp, which consumes only one centime's worth of oil in one hour. His inconsolable widow continues his business in the Rue aux Trois. Goods sent to all parts of the city. Do not mistake the opposite shop for this.

Which proves that the bereaved sometimes give their minds over to other things than just their sorrow.

THE A. E. A. AND PARITY

One of the most important developments of the Alabama Education Association convention ending Saturday was the outspoken resolution on educational parity.

"We ask," the resolution reads, "that the legislature make equitable provision for the payment of educational appropriations, either by setting up a sufficient amount of earmarked funds for public education to be paid its state appropriations in full, or submit to the people of Alabama a constitutional amendment declaring public education to be a primary and essential function of government and prohibiting the setting aside of any appropriation as a prior claim upon state revenues, except appropriations to pay the principal and interest on the public debt."

The resolution commends itself to us as fair; and since the first alternative is exceedingly remote, it is virtually a direct pronouncement for parity.

In his address to the association, President Paul Munro went even further and pointed out that unless education is to continue in the position of having to "log-roll" for revenues necessary to its needs, it must be placed on a parity with the other departments of the state government, so that all departments will share equally the burden or odium of revenue measures.

The A. E. A. resolution is an advance over the Douglass-St. John measure which the A. E. A. has hitherto sponsored, but which will go only half way, leaving educatiion's earmarked funds untouched.

It also is an improvement over Senator Fletcher's plan of parity, for the Senator would have exempted highway department appropriations, notwithstanding that this department has always had one of the strongest lobbies in the capitol and can be counted on to take care of itself, even if put on a parity basis.

The plan of parity sponsored by the A. E. A. is the plan this newspaper has long favored. It also is the plan promised by Governor Graves and most of the legislators during the campaign. With all interested parties committed to it, there ought to be no trouble submitting the amendment to the people. If submitted, it is sure to be adopted.—Birmingham Post.

HIGH SCHOOL NEWS ITEMS

Montevallo High School was well represented in the Junior State Typing contest held last Friday in Birmingham. Dorothy Jean Gilbert was Montevallo's representative and also the winner of the contest. She typed forty-three words a minute in a fifteen minute speed test. Dorothy Jean will receive a loving cup for her reward and she and her teacher, Mrs. Marjorie Bagwell, received a large box of candy from the Underwood Typewriter Company. The school is very proud of Dorothy Jean and her teacher.

The Inter-High School Meet held each year at Alabama College has aroused much interest in students of Montevallo High School. This year our school will send a larger number of representatives than it has in the last few years. The meeting will begin April 2 and continue until Saturday at noon, April 4.

Much work has been accomplished in Home Economics. Girls have been selected to represent the high school in cooking, selecting menus, child care, and girls' wardrobe. The Home Economics girls have won many honors in the past years at the meeting.

Montevallo High will also have a representative in music, Carolyn Mays. She entered for music last year and received honorable mention.

Eleven girls are going for physical education. These girls have the required number of points.

Those attending the meeting are: Dorothy Warren, Gulmer Wilson, Elizabeth Seale, Helen Blackburn, Willie Ree Dennis, Mildred Moore, Willie Pearl Seale, Frances Bailey, Myrtle Reach, Anne Appleton, Billie Ruth Fitts, Blanch Busby, Laura Garrett, Ollis Mills, Dorothy Galloway, Melvin Stephens, Marie Orr, Clara Lee, Mary K. Sorrell, Elsie Lockerage.

GIRL SCOUTS

There were no troop meetings last week, however, the Girl Scout Council had its monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Vaughan. Mrs. Hood was welcomed as a new member and four other members were present. The council is organized for another year as follows:

Commissioner, Mrs. Vaughan; deputy commissioner, Mrs. Wills; secretary and publicity chairman, Mrs. Kennerly; treasurer and finance chairman, Mrs. Cooper; camping and Juliet Low member, Mrs. Appleton; chairman of lodges and award, Mrs. Wills; training and personnel chairman, Mrs. Vaughan; Brownie representative, Mrs. Hood.

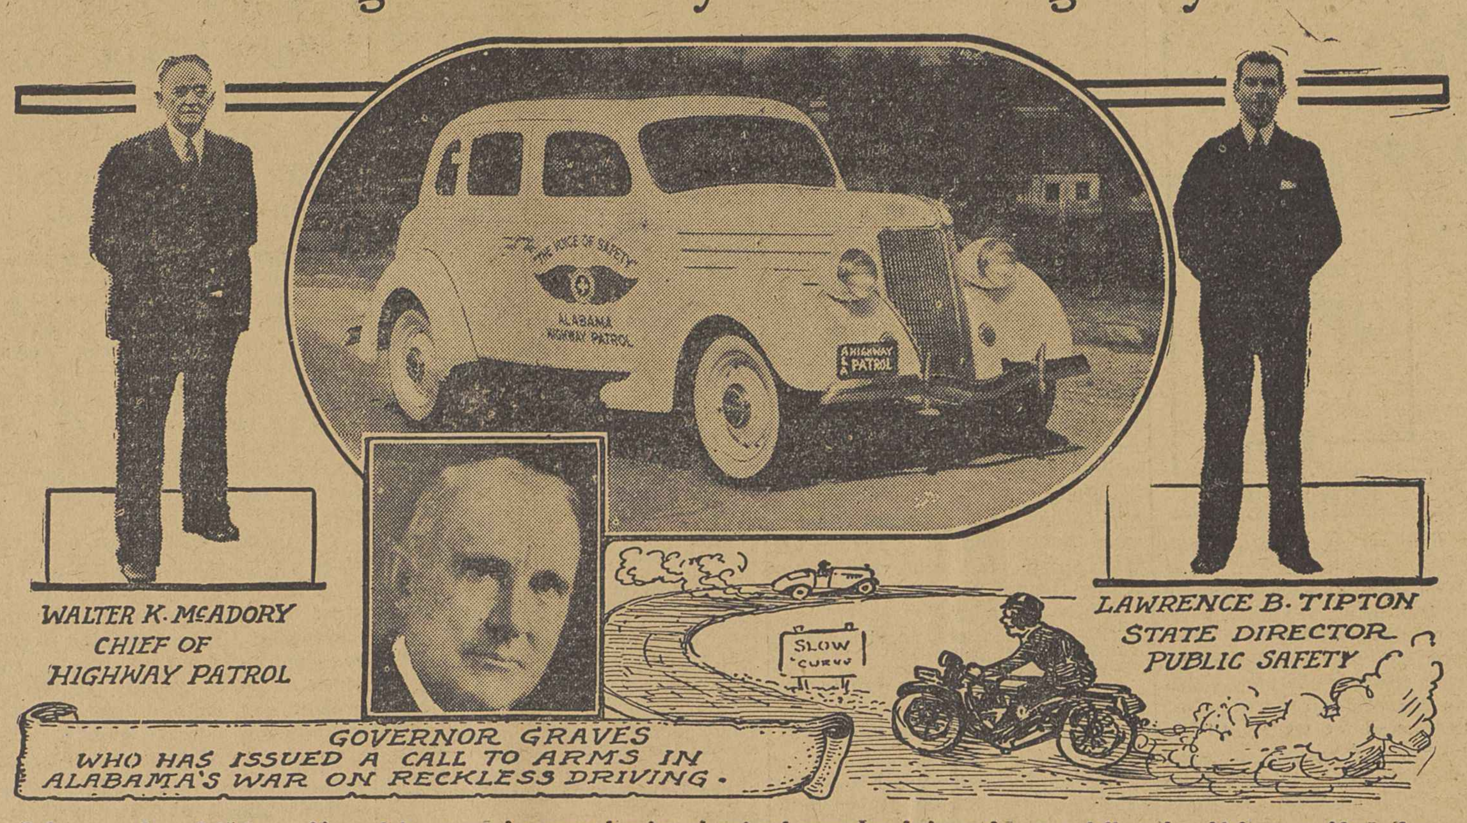
Evangelist Of Safety Takes To Highways



Safety crusaders of Alabama this week inaugurated a comprehensive educational campaign designated to materially reduce highway accidents during 1936. The gospel of safety is to be carried into every county in the State. The white car, "the voice of safety," will be the symbol of careful driving wherever it is seen. In his itinerary, Lawrence B. Tipton, director of public safety, will have the support of Gov. Graves, Walter K. McAdory, chief of the highway patrol, and every patrolman on the force. The educational campaign is to be conducted through city and county officials.

One Hundred Years of Public Education

One of the most pressing problems facing Alabama today is that of proper support of public schools. The question is wholly one of how much support. Not in any mind is there a shadow of doubt as to the state's responsibility to furnish education for all.

Yet public education in Alabama is just 100 years old this year, and for a good many years after it began the public school was no more than a local obligation. It was in 1836 that the citizens of Mobile through their local taxes provided for the maintenance of the Barton Academy as a public institution. It was not until 1854, however, that the state through action of the Legislature, admitted any financial responsibility for the common schools. In 1849, Gov. Collier had urged the Legislature to establish a public school system, only to be told by the House committee on education that while the necessity of common schools was admitted, heavy expenditures could not permit state contributions to the enterprise. The best that could be done in 1854 was the creation of the office of state superintendent of education, the holder of the office being expected to do "missionary" work among the counties in promoting education.

Citizens of Mobile, under the leadership of the Mobile County Board of Education, are planning to celebrate the centennial of public education in Alabama with an elaborate program this spring. The event holds statewide interest, however, especially in view of the current interest in the public school system.

Since 1854, when the state made its first measly appropriation of $3,000 a year for support of a public school system there has steadily developed belief that the state has no more important function than the education of its youth, since through education all other state responsibilities are either lightened or made more valuable. Today, the state's largest single business is that of education. More of the state's money goes for maintaining the public schools than for any other function.

But while Alabama can be interested, and even take a measure of pride, in this growth, it does not follow that we can rest on our oars. The test of our progress in education is not alone in the distance we have come, but also in the distance we must go. Education takes genuine pride only in its tomorrows.

In comparison with other states, Alabama has slipped back educationally in the last few years. This was emphasized in speeches at the A. E. A. convention showing that whereas the national average of the percentage of total amount spent for education had increased from 3.35 to 3.64 since 1930, in Alabama the percentage had shrunk from 3.44 to 2.76. The average for Southern states is 3.19.

All states suffered in their educational program during the critical years just past. But apparently Alabama has made little progress in bringing its schools back. We have experienced the shame of seeing the federal government step in and keep our schools open by making what were little better than charity appropriations. Our teachers, with a loyalty that should abash other public employes, have worked for miserably low salaries and at times without assurance of pay.

The best attitude to take toward celebration of the centennial of public school education in Alabama is one of moving forward to still further acceptance of the responsibility first assumed in this state back in 1836. The celebration should be one of renewed dedication to an accepted obligation.—Birmingham News.

Program of the Resettlement Administration

The economic depression upset and disproved many of the traditional beliefs of the American people. One of the strongest of these was the notion that farming could always be depended upon to furnish food and shelter.

This comfortable theory was exploded when over a million farm families applied for relief in 1934. We could no longer moralize and say that the families were on relief because the bread-winner was lazy and good for nothing. We all had to recognize the fact that many families were on relief because of no fault of their own.

We cannot place the blame for the plight of these million farm families on relief and of hundreds of thousands of others on the border line of subsistence on any single cause. It was the result of generations of farming on land not capable of furnishing a livelihood of low prices for farm products, of heavy debt incurred when farming was more profitable, of farming on the one cash crop plan, and of natural catastrophies which had destroyed homes and farms.

For two years a million farm families were kept from starvation by government relief. Relief could not offer the farmer any opportunity to plan the working out of a means of existence for himself. Of necessity, the amount of relief money given to a family was the minimum with which they could manage to exist.

No one could seriously consider the continuance of a system under which hundreds of thousands of families would be forced to maintain their standard of living on this low subsistence level.

Those farmers when the emergency relief measures had tilted over in the darkest days of depression needed and wanted an opportunity to stand on their own feet.

Remembering the causes that had driven farmers to ask for relief, the Resettlement Administration undertook a rehabilitation program to furnish farmers with aid and guidance in order that they might be permanently self-supporting.

The Resettlement Administration has a rehabilitation program today because millions of farm people are in danger of starving or becoming permanent relief charges unless they are given a new chance to readjust their farming through scientific planning.

In order to reestablish destitute and low income farm families on a firm economic footing we have undertaken to do three things: first, to see that the farmers have adequate land on which to farm; second, to see that they have adequate equipment with which to carry on farming operations; and third, to see that they have adequate technical advice in farm management.

Loans are made for the purchase of farm supplies, for the renting of land, for the repair of farm equipment and buildings, and for subsistence. Repayment of these loans is partially assured by mortgages and liens on property and crops. But the principal assurance which the Resettlement Administration desires is the assurance that these families have a permanent basis for rehabilitation. This is furnished by the farm management plan.

The rehabilitation of farmers is accomplished by individual loans, the size and use of which is determined by the farm management plan. These plans take into consideration all possible sources of income and all possible expenditures of the farm family, and, in order for the farmer to be truly rehabilitated, these two must balance.

But we in Resettlement know that sometimes a farmer cannot liquidate even a small loan because he is already burdened with such a heavy debt. On the other hand, there are farmers who can liquidate a small loan but a loan large enough to supply certain things which they need cannot be justified in the light of their anticipated income.

Knowing that many a needy farmer's budget could not be balanced because of one or both of these conditions, the Resettlement Administration is carrying on two services which are available to low income farm families regardless of whether they are rehabilitation clients.

The first of these is the farm debt adjustment service which is designed to relieve the condition of overburdening debt.

Would You Like a FREE Vacation Trip To Cuba in June?

THE MONTEVALLO TIMES is in position to offer an opportunity whereby someone in this community may earn by a little spare time for only a few days, a FREE VACATION TRIP of SEVEN days in Cuba in June, with all expenses paid.

The person going on this trip will be a member of the Alabama Press Association party, which will include representatives of the press, together with a number of State officials and other prominent people of Alabama.

Somebody in Montevallo can have this trip for only a few hours work. If you would like to consider the proposition —

COTTON SEED

It is almost time again to plant cotton seed. Will we plant the RIGHT kind or the WRONG kind? We have in our warehouse 8 bales of cotton that is under 7-8 staple that we have been unable to sell at any price since January 1st this year. Will we grow this kind this year or will we grow the kind that is MARKKETABLE?

D. P. L. No. 11 is the best variety for production and staple that we know of. The best turn-out we had last year was that we ginned 1225 pounds of D. P. L. No. 11 and the bale weighed 553 pounds.

If we should have another drouth this year and the growers do not improve their seed, we fear that the cotton under 7-8 in staple cannot be sold at any price.

We have these seed on hand for sale at $1.50 per bushel. Last year these seed produced cotton of 1-1-8 inch staple.

Don't think we are payingf or this adv. to sell cotton seed only. If you have seed that will produce full 7-8 staple or better, then don't buy, but if you have not, then we urge you to buy from us or someone else who has good seed that will produce a safe cotton. Don't take any chances on short staple which very likely will not sell at any price.

Very Nice for Old Honus!

Recognize the gentleman in the center? He is none other than Honus Wagner, greatest shortstop in history and now coach of the Pittsburgh Pirate baseball team. The photograph was taken when Rangerettes from the Texas Centennial Exposition opening in Dallas June 6, visited the team's San Antonio training camp.

Work Starts on "Cavalcade of Texas"

The history of Texas, under the six flags which have flown over it from the days of the first Spaniards to the present, will be set forth in pomp and color in "The Cavalcade of Texas," an expansive pageant to be presented each night during the Texas Centennial Exposition, which runs in Dallas from June 6 to Nov. 29. Above J. Mark Hamilton, director and expert on lore of the Southwest, and Jan Isabelle Fortune, well known magazine writer, confer over the script.

Texas Exposition 150 Per Cent Over Original Size Plan

Chrysler Contract Puts Dallas World's Fair on Top in Motor Exhibits

DALLAS, Texas—The Texas Centennial Exposition today turned the home stretch toward its June 6 opening, two and one-half times larger than its sponsors originally anticipated.

From $10,000,000 value, estimated when the project was be-begun, the first World's Fair of the Southwest, has grown into a $25,000,000 affair, the steel framework of its construction jobs stretching down mile after mile of parallel concourses.

New Building Ordered

With the signing of the Chrysler Motor Corporation for a huge display space the Exposition boasts the largest motor exhibit ever shown at a World's Fair.

Originally the $400,000 Hall of Transportation was intended to house exhibits of both transportation and petroleum industries.

So large was the space taken by Chrysler, however, that Exposition officials were forced to hurriedly realign their plans and build a separate Hall of Petroleum.

Ford, with its own building, General Motors, with a huge, air-conditioned auditorium where changing shows of radio and stage stars will be presented in one-week engagements throughout the June 6-Nov. 29 Exposition period, and Chrysler with an elaborate participation in the making, will give Dallas a record-breaking representation of the motor industry.

Livestock Also Featured

Further, the big fair will boast the largest livestock show ever assembled.

Other exhibits keep the pace, with the display space at a premium and officials assured of an exhibit "sell-out" long before the opening day.

The City of Dallas, the State of Texas and the Federal government are keeping step with their important Exposition building programs.

W. A. Webb, general manager of the Exposition who has an international reputation for his railroad construction work, has announced every building will be completed by the June 6 opening date.

The spirit of the Old West will be recreated at every turn.

In a city as metropolitan as any in the nation, the frontier days will live again.

Ten-Gallon Hats Epidemic

Ten-gallons are blooming on every corner. Service stations are garbing their attendants in the cow-puncher's regalia. Department stores are clothing their elevator girls in cowgirl uniforms similar to those of the Exposition Rangerettes. Other stores are donating the big hats to their employes with instructions to wear them on all occasions.

Even the Exposition police will be in full Old West attire.

Not a single detail has been overlooked by the Exposition chiefs in their efforts to make the Southwest's World's Fair the most colorful in history.

Canadian

Texas Centennial Exposition officials originally intended to have 48 Rangerettes on hostess duty when the $25,000,000 World's Fair opens in Dallas June 6. When they found one of those selected came from Washington, D. C., they included Mexico to make an even 50. Now, not to overlook Canada, they have appointed Grace Louise Bailey, daughter of a Dallas publisher and born in Ojibwa, Ontario, near Windsor, making a total of 51.

Mrs. P. J. Kroell spent Monday at Shelby Springs.

Phils Look Better Than Figures Show 'Cause They Hustle

APPEARANCES—ever gay deceivers—are at it again. Right now they are making mugs out of the records and laws of probability by indicating that the Phillies are one of the classiest clubs performing in these parts.

It is upon the playing field, rather than upon paper, that appearances do their best for Jimmy Wilson's young men, too. Judged solely off their Grapefruit league box scores they are not impressive.

These present Phillies hustle. In marked contrast to their Shibe park rivals, they seem always striving to do the most with their opportunities. Such spirit in itself often enables them to come up with plays that might otherwise seem impossible and, given reasonable opportunity for expression, might well win many hard-fought games next summer.

Yes—since Baker bowl has so frequently had a wearing effect upon other briskly-moving springtime favorites—baseball men here hold out little save sixth place for the present team. Even though the pitching must surely be improved over 1935, the Phils lack a punch of the Babe Ruth, Chuck Klein, Jimmy Foxx variety.

There are eight infielders on the roster. Only one of them—Gene Corbett, who did it for Winnipeg and so has little chance of winning a regular job anyhow—hit better than .300 last year. Leo Norris, the shortstop who served such a long term with Minneapolis, has power. Dolph Camilli, the first baseman, slaps a long ball.

In the outfield there is no vast improvement. Ethan Allen is a far smarter hitter now than in his youthful Cincinnati days, but his shrewdly placed blows no longer carry so much distance. He hit .307 last year and is the best of the gardeners.

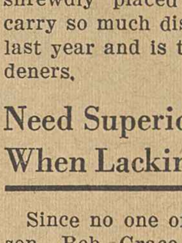
Need Superior Pitching When Lacking Sluggers

Since no one of the catchers, Wilson, Bob Grace, or Bill Atwood, the rookie, are notable sluggers, the Phils, thus, would seem to need superior pitching and airtight defense if they are to climb out of their accustomed depths.

Undoubtedly they will field better than most Baker bowl representatives have fielded in the past. Undoubtedly also one or two veteran pitchers are improved, while there are recruits whose forthcoming efforts can be noted with prayerful admiration.

Buck Walter's fast ball makes the reformed infielder a subject of praise whenever other players discuss the team. Joe Bowman now knows how to slow up on the batter and can handle other trick stuff better than when he was a Giant The big Indian, Euel Moore, is improving physically over last season, and declares that his arm is as good as in his rookie year.

Among the youngsters there is Passo Passeau, reluctantly given up by the Pirates in the Todd deal. He is one of the most eminent of strike-out artists, having fanned 239 batters in 244 innings, while hurling for Charleston in 1934. When the usually self-contained Wilson talks about him, the air is filled with adjectives concerning one of the best fast balls in the business.



Curt Davis

That is, of course, if the aging Davis is around Philadelphia at the time. Right now Curt, bigger and better than ever, is the star of the Phils. If he stays with them his pitching may—although the chance is no more than a slight one — put them into fifth place. Yet, swell pitcher that he is, there is reason to believe that his departure would be the club's best break.

With Davis in their line-up the Cubs would be 4 to 1 to win the pennant. Fortified with the three or four good young men who could be obtained for him, the already improved Phils would be well advanced toward geting some place next year.

The best guess, incidentally, is that the Cubs and Phils will get tired of outwaiting one another and get together on the deal soon.

IF BREVITY ever gives up racing he should have a great future as a movie star or congressman. The bay three-year-old, who still would be the best-looking thing on the turf if he could not breeze Derby distances in record time, can act. Furthermore, he has that sort of appeal which puts the crowd on his side from the moment when he is first led into public view.

Most of the truly successful thoroughbreds of other years have had these qualities, which are far more enduring than the records when indicating real class.

Exterminator was so far from being a handsome horse that he was called "Old Bones." But the words always were uttered with affectionate admiration. Billy Kelly, Commander Ross' little sprinter who was so well loved by the crowd of 18 years or so ago, had a similar way of communing with his audience. Billy, who, like Brevity, had a great fondness for lumps of sugar, used to thrust his muzzle over the rail in search of stray offerings of sweetmeats.

Man O' War Had "It"; Was Champ of Champs

Man o' War, who knew his true worth and never let anybody forget it even though success never went to his head, was another personality horse. Being a champion of champions and the Joe Louis of his day and business, he must occasionally have been bored by the feeble competition provided for him. but he never let on about this. Always when he passed through the paddock gate some spark seemed to flash between him and the crowd. Then people settled back, calm in the perfect knowledge that here was a champion dead set upon doing his champion stuff.

I mention such items of the past and present without any desire to compete with writers of the Black Beauty fables. There are people who regard horses as the dumbest of all animals (not excepting the $2 bettors who occupy their days in being touted onto hopeless long shots). Then there are jockeys such as Wayne Wright, who has ridden winners in the three richest stakes of the current national campaign.

Wayne Wright

A reddish-haired youngster, rather taller than the average jockey, Wright is not given much to communing with his fellows. A quiet, thoughtful lad, who is more in the manner of Sande than of the rough and ready Don Meade or the playful Silvio Coucci, he has confided to his friends that Brevity can understand, react and communicate much like a human. Having observed that perfect communion between horse and rider when they were winning the $20,000 feature at Miami, I do not doubt it.

Wright, who rode Top Row in the Santa Anita, also says that Brevity is the best horse of the year. Probably at the moment, he is correct in that, too. Yet for the benefit of newspaper brethren who, short weeks ago, were beating the drums for Discovery and the N. Y. U. Basketball team one or two things might be hinted at before the Kentucky classic is permitted to go by default.

Prize fighters who are seeking their fortunes down in Florida are getting little save sunburn this season. I saw two fast light-heavyweights perform the other night before a crowd of 600. There were four knockdowns before the final convincer was put on in the fifth. The winner's end was $8.

Miami would like to persuade one of the New York team to train there next year, but citizens still are putting the rap on Bill Terry. Their year-old complaint concerns the admission fee charged by the Giants. . . . Phil Weintraub, the hard-hitting outfielder peddled by the Giants, also no longer loves his former boss. . . . Young Eddie Thomas, who got them off so neatly at Santa Anita, is the best starter since the celebrated and departed Dade, according to horsemen. He will work at Detroit this summer and they are hoping that the New York state racing commission will scout him.

Suggested sign for Shibe park, home of the ailing A's—"Abandon hope all ye who enter here." . . . Fabric Accent on Pretty Woolens

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUIT yourself this spring — it's quite the smartest thing to do. To state it more emphatically, a suit or "compose" ensemble tailored of handsome woolen weave is a fashion "must" this spring. You are not the type to wear a suit? Before you jump at conclusions see the endless variety of suits in the spring style parade.

There's a whole family-tree of suits in the fashion picture, related as far as the perfectly stunning woolens that fashion them, yet entirely different in the final analysis of color moods, silhouette and general style. If you are too heavy at the waistline to wear one of the trim little man-tailored short-jacket suits, there is a consolation prize awaiting you in the picturesque cape-and-skirt models tailored of some one or other of the gorgeous tropical woolens that make color glory and novel weave their theme. Such a costume is pictured to the left in the illustration. This is a Bruyere ensemble of a nubby gray and green mixed summer tweed.

The classic tailleur developed in men's wear suitings is an outstanding fashion, with definite preference for the single breasted type with its flattering sweep of long lapels. Both hard and soft finished worsteds are used in these suits, with sharkskins, herringbone weaves, distinct checks, cheviots, serge types, monotone and chalk stripe flannels and wool gabardine all important.

Men's checked worsted is the practical fabric for the good looking spring suit to the right in the picture. It has a classic single-breasted three-button jacket with traditional flap pockets and a slim straight skirt. The back panel of the jacket and the skirt are correspondingly slashed at the sides.

The new mixed or compose ensembles are appearing with coats in contrasting color and fabric. The "baby reefer" of fingertip length with double-breasted closing and man-tailored styling of lapels and pockets is frequently seen in covert cloth, or in wool gabardine, in beige, tan, navy or gray worn over tailored suits or with the one-piece dress of contrasting woolen. A reefer coat of the sort described centers the group shown. It is tailored of a very fine wool gabardine. Note especially its new length. The latest "baby" swagger coats also adopt this new length, also a hip-length.

The newest tweeds (in the lead for travel and country wear) are in rich deep colorings accented with flecks and nubs of contrasting shades. There are also many soft lovely tweeds in natural and pastel colors with over-patternings in bright color. Casual assemblings are smart in informal suits, the skirts frequently being in monotone or flecked tweeds and the jackets in gun club patternings, hound's tooth or shepherd checks or conservative glen plaids.

A leading fashion is the adaptation of the masculine morning suit with striped skirt and oxford gray jacket in men's wear worsted, frequently bound with braid. Another favorite in this class is developed in men's wear flannel with pearl gray skirt and steel gray jacket with revers of the lighter skirt fabric.

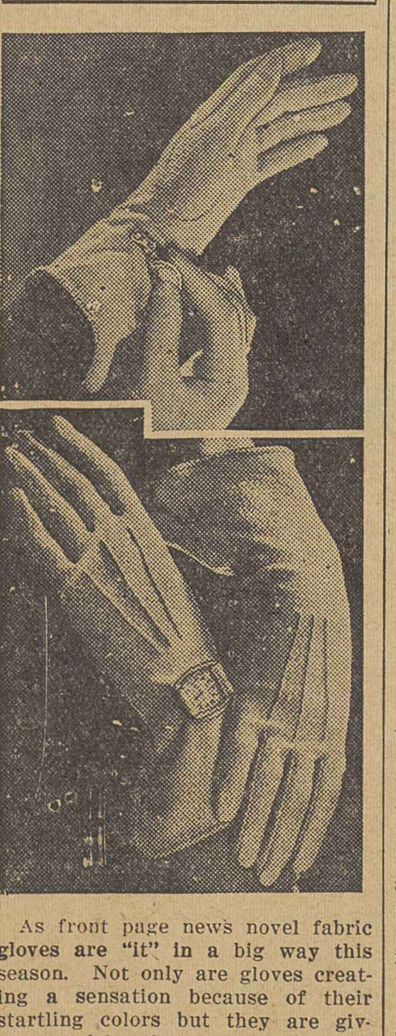
TRICKY GLOVES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



As front page news novel fabric gloves are "it" in a big way this season. Not only are gloves creating a sensation because of their startling colors but they are given to tricks that are as practical as they are intriguing. A really wonderful idea is the glove with a zipper pocket in the left wrist to hold your small change. See it in action as pictured above. Another cute idea is the glove with an unbreakable crystal inset on left wrist (see picture) so that your wrist watch is visible without turning back the cuff. This year there is an endless variety of beautiful mesh glove fabrics of bemberg brought out.

SPRING HATS REVEL IN TOASTED TONES

In addition to black and plenty of navy blue—especially a dark purplish shade—the prominent colors in hats for spring and early summer are toasted tones, blond tortoise shell, burnt straw, natural beige, fawn, tomato red and soft tints of washed blue, as well as tones of grayish blues on the slate side.

Bright red is used a great deal in combination with black, with navy blue and with white. The greens are represented by soft tones of reseda.

Pastel tones in general are foreseen for spring and summer, and among them is a soft shade of pale faded pink that is sponsored by all the leading milliners. This color is called old pink by certain houses and ashes of roses by other designers.

Fashion Notes

Helium is the spring fashion name for oyster-white tone.

The popular thin smock is certainly a joy for the housewife.

Babylike rompers are shown for beach wear by some French designers.

Tiny flower turbans and gay belts will touch up your dark dress costume.

A modernized directoire influence appears in some of the new evening gowns.

White pique plays a leading role in trimming on spring clothes as well as hats.

Hip-length flowing jackets, with all the fullness in the back, are worn this season.

An enormous velvet bow worn on the left shoulder is used to trim a graceful satin evening gown.

Petticoats made of bright prints on a dark crepe ground are smart to wear beneath your dark tailored suit.

Most important of the color fashions is the accent on colored gloves, flowers, belts, even in hats, to be worn with black or navy costumes.

THOSE awards made by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences are still causing violent debates all over Hollywood. Executives of the Screen Actors Guild and the Screen Writers Guild telegraphed the members the day before the awards were made, urging them not to attend the presentation banquet. They charged that the academy is producer-controlled, and that studio politics controlled the giving of the awards. Of course the Academy heads denied that, and the battle has been on ever since. It is claimed that Bette Davis was given the prize for the best performance given by a woman during the year, not because of her work in "Dangerous," but because she didn't get the award last year for her performance in "Of Human Bondage." It is urged that Victor McLaglen, who won the prize for the men, gave just one good performance, in "The Informer," whereas Charles Laughton and Paul Muni each gave several. In fact, there are arguments about everything but that belated award of D. W. Griffith for his work in the days before there was any Academy.

If you want to go into the movies, you'll be interested in the news that several of the big companies are planning to develop their own actors, by establishing schools in New York. In fact, Paramount already has such a school, and RKO and Metro are thinking of following their example. It's all caused by the fact that the picture companies have not been able to recruit suitable players from the stage. They've scoured the field of vaudeville, radio, night clubs and college dramatic societies, and have concluded that training schools are the best solution of this problem.

Walt Disney has a school, too, devoted to training artists to animate the Disney pictures. Recently he advertised for help, and only fifty people out of the 1,700 who answered made the grade. Now he's advertising again. The candidates whom he accepts receive a small salary while they're learning the work, and then go on the pay roll as animators.

Childbirth's Pains Safely Banned by Savants' Discovery

New Chemical Formula Puts Mother to Sleep

WASHINGTON. — A safe way of taking the suffering out of childbirth has long been a goal of medical scientists as well as the prayer of countless mothers the world over. One by one, various anesthetics and pain-killing agents have been tried—chloroform, ether, nitrous oxide or "laughing gas" and twilight sleep.

Some have been rejected because of danger to mother and child. Others were of limited use because complicated apparatus and skilled anesthetists were needed to give them. Others have brought only partial relief of suffering, or have relieved the pain in some cases and not in others.

Years of Research.

The long quest seems now to have been ended by a discovery of two Washington (D. C.) physicians, Drs. Howard F. Kane and George B. Roth of George Washington University Medical school. After years of careful research they have hit on what may prove to be the ideal childbirth anesthetic.

The agent they use is a mixture of paraldehyde and benzyl alcohol. The mixture is injected when the first labor pains are reported and the patient falls asleep within half an hour or an hour. She awakens refreshed some six or eight hours after delivery.

Is Easily Administered.

The chief advantage of the new method, Doctor Kane said, is that there is no danger to either mother or child. Another advantage is the fact that the anesthetic can be easily given and requires no complicated apparatus. It has been tried in several hundred cases during the last three and a half years at the George Washington University hospital, and no ill effects have been noticed in either mother or child.

Gold Output Value Exceeds Billion for First Time

NEW YORK.—Gold mining, among the oldest industries of man, entered the billion dollar business stage for the first time in 1935, the meeting here of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers learned.

"Preliminary estimates for 1935," declared John J. Croston, Boston mining engineer, "indicate that more than 30,000,000 ounces of gold were produced, 10 per cent more than the 1934 record.

"Ranking in order as gold producers were the Union of South Africa, Russia, the United States and Canada, with Russia showing the greatest percentage of increase. In view of the large number of new mines being prepared for production in Canada, Australia, the Gold Coast and the United States, further increases in production are expected.

Depression Boomed Mines.

The start of the depression in 1929, Mr. Croston pointed out, marked the turning point for gold mining from a declining to an increased industry. Up till 1929 there was a gradual depletion of known gold deposits and the operating costs increased while the price of gold was pegged—as it had been since 1917—at $20.67 an ounce.

Biggest spur, of course, was when Great Britain and finally the United States went off the gold standard.

Lipstick Scent Causes Occasional Skin Trouble

CHICAGO. — Change the scent of your lipstick, girls, if the kind you are using brings on a skin trouble.

The doctors have traced some cases of lipstick dermatitis — the skin disorder that occasionally develops among users of a lip rouge—to the perfume it contains.

A particular offender is a perfume containing methyl heptine carbonate, The Journal of the American Medical Association states.

A young woman came to her doctor with a breaking out on the skin, which he traced to her use of lipstick. She had been using a certain brand for years with no ill effects until she changed shades.

By patch tests on the girl's arm, the physician found that she was sensitive not to the oil or dyes in the rouge but to the perfume used in two shades she had been using.

Punch and Judy Shows Solve Kids' Behavior Problems

'Problem Child' Analyzed by Puppet Dramas

CLEVELAND.—Punch and Judy and other puppet show characters beloved of children are helping psychiatrists untangle serious behavior difficulties and ward off mental and personality disorders. Details of this new use for puppet shows were given by Dr. Lauretta Bender and Adolph Woltmann of Bellevue hospital, New York city, at a meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric association.

The method has met with striking success, the New York psychiatrists said. It was developed in the children's observation ward of the hospital where hundreds of children suffering from all kinds of behavior problems are sent in each year from children's courts, mental hygiene clinics, schools and other institutions.

The greatest need among this group of children is, first, an adequate understanding of their emotional problems and, second, a form of treatment that will deal with the emotional problems involved. Because of the small staff, it is impossible to give individual attention to each group of children. The puppet shows, however, can be used to detect the difficulties of the children in a group and also to help the children work out the solution of their problems.

How the Plots Develop.

The shows are written and produced to deal directly with such problems of children as rivalry between brothers and sisters, the unloved child, aggression, and over-devotion to one or the other parent. The hero, Caspar, can in the shows face all kinds of problems and the children in the audience can help him decide what to do.

The children are also taught to make the puppets and write and produce their own plays. In the course of these classes, the children discuss freely the various problems in the impersonal terms of the puppets. The puppets have in this way helped the psychiatrists enormously in gaining insight into the various complexes of the children.

Electric 'Prospector' Finds Coal Veins in Pennsylvania

NEW YORK.—The same technique of using electrical prospecting methods — often likened to electrical divining rods—which has worked so successfully in discovering oil, gold and other minerals, is now being used to find deposits of coal in Pennsylvania.

Scientists told the meeting of the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers here that the new electrical methods, based on how well a seam of coal conducts electricity, were successful in the Mahanoy coal fields which already have been worked for 70 years.

Locating Anthracite Pits.

Most of the coal seams, Dr. Maurice Ewing, A. P. Crary, J. W. Peoples and J. A. Peoples, Jr., describe in their report, were worked near the surface in the past but since the workings were never completely or accurately mapped complete extraction of the coal from older pits was not obtained. In consequence, they point out, virgin bodies of coal, not heretofore known, are yet to be found.

Now It's All Right to Mow Your Dandelions

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—Dandelions have almost ceased from troubling lawn-anxious householders; but Prof. Carl D. LaRue of the University of Michigan is offering, for future reference, the results of his study of seed behavior in the heads of dandelions mowed before the seeds were ripe.

He undertook his investigation because he had received many inquiries as to whether dandelion heads cut by the lawnmower would go on and ripen seeds that would sprout later. He cut off a large number of the heads at various stages of development and let them lie on moist moss until they had fully dried. Then he examined and placed the seeds under conditions for germination.

He found that in all heads cut at any stage before the white down ("pappus" to botanists) began to show above the closed green sheath after the petals had wilted, the seeds looked quite unpromising and that their germination performance did not belie their looks. They all failed to sprout; in fact, after ten days they had all decayed.

Professor LaRue concludes: "Apparently then, until the white of the dandelion pappus begins to extend beyond the green involucre tips, the heads may be cut and allowed to dry on the lawn without any danger of spreading the seed."

Let Age and Youth Agree to Differ: A Form of Agreement

Conclusion of Sage on the Problem of Life's Contrasts.

One of the most serious of life's contrasts is the continual misunderstanding which arises between old age and youth. It is trite but true that from time immemorial age has been dissatisfied with youth and youth has resented the implication Though we ourselves had no such temptations as beset the young people of today, nevertheless our parents were just as anxious about our doings as any parent now could be. To us, their children, the problems of this perplexing day seem intricate in comparison. R. L. S. thought it out in this fashion: Let them (age and youth) agree to differ, for who knows but what agreeing to differ may not be a form of agreement, rather than a form of difference?

Lady Slane, in her attempt to live her own life after fifty years of being a satellite in the wake of a distinguished husband, is criticized by some as devoid of maternal love in wishing to live apart from her family. But is not life in most families a proof of the saying that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country? The desire to explore one's individual country becomes rather important as life recedes with all passions spent.

So much is now being written about flaming youth that it will soon believe that the whole stage of life was meant for the presentation of its own play and the footlights solely to exhibit its own charms. Well, so be it, since upon its shoulders must fall the work of the world. Sir Edmund Gosse in writing his "Father and Son," endured severe criticism because he said too much (later, because he said too little) in trying to present the influence of a strictly puritanical father upon a son whose attitude toward life had changed. Stevenson's comment upon the book helped to smooth over the harshness of such criticism when he said that it was a very delicate task, very delicately done. Published in 1907, it was, to use the author's words, a record of a struggle between two temperaments, two consciences, and almost two epochs.

It seems to me that Mr. Brownell in his "Standards," has found the keynote to the lack of harmony between the two generations when he says that youth fails to consider how much more crowded the pigeonholes of age are than its own, and how much more irksome it is to arrange their contents, and that, in conjunction with the proverbial egotism of youth, is the whole cause of the difficulties that arise.

A case in point is the talk between the aged Belarius and the two sons of Cymbeline before they learn of their princely heritage. Belarius tells at length about the charms of mountain life in Wales, adding that it is nobler than attending for a check, richer than doing nothing for a bauble, prouder than rustling in unpaid silk. They listen respectfully and reply:

Haply this life is best
If quiet life be best, sweeter to you
That have a sharper known, well corresponding
With your stiff age; but unto us it is
A cell of ignorance, traveling abed.
What should we speak of
When we are as old as you? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how
In this, our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing.

How hard it is to hide the sparks of nature, says Belarius to himself! M. O. W., in Indianapolis News.

Pikes Peak a Level Plain in the Far-Distant Past

Famous Pikes Peak is merely a piece of level prairie standing on end. Twelve million years ago the area near Denver, Colo., where the 14,000-foot mountain now stands was a level plain.

Pioneers with their covered wagons (had there been pioneers and covered wagons in that remote time) could have driven across it without suspecting that the prairie was soon to be pushed up into a lofty peak. That is the view of Northwestern university geologists. — Washington Post.

HEAVY RESCUE — WELL?

Montgomery, March 30 — Montgomery police believe they have topped the record of queer jobs for policemen. They pulled a 325-pound negro woman out of a 35-foot well, unhurt. Irene Washington, the victim, broke through rotten planking covering the well and went to the bottom. Bystanders, attracted by her shrieks, called the police. Officer Collins lowered a chain, but she couldn't hold it—or the men couldn't pull her up. So he got a ladder. With the chain and the ladder she was helped out. And Officer Collins nonchalantly returned to his beat.

LABOR FIGHTS HUDDLESTON

Bessemer, Ala.—Political spokesmen for the Bessemer Trades Council have joined Birmingham labor leaders in an active drive to defeat George Huddleston in his race for re-election to Congress. A resolution scoring Mr. Huddleston's anti-New Deal record in Congress, and charging him with betraying labor which supported him in the past, was adopted by the Bessemer Council's political committee. "All New Deal measures and all bills advocated by the American Federation of Labor and supported by President Roosevelt have been opposed by Congressman Huddleston," the Bessemer group declared. The Bessemer committee also voted not to endorse any of Huddleston's opponents in the May primary.

"VOICE WITH A SMILE"

Helen Rowland, newspaper columnist, had something to say the other day about the voice with a smile. Writing in regard to the voices of women over the telephone she said, "Funny, how a girl will spend so much time and money on facials, permanent waves and reducing treatments, when half the effort spent on cultivating the sweet notes in her voice would net her twice the results." Miss Rowland also observed that it takes time, patience and a great deal of self-control to be always amiable and gracious over the telephone, but that it pays.

Business Is Better Says Ford Report

Dearborn, Mich. — Substantial improvement in general business is reflected in the increase in Ford V-8 commercial car and truck sales during 1935, according to reports of official registrations of these units received at the home offices of the Ford Motor Company.

The Ford volume of trucks and commercial cars for the whole year was 44.9 per cent greater than in 1934. The volume for December was up more than 116 per cent over the previous December.

Registrations of new Ford trucks and commercial cars in 1935 totalled 185,848 units as against 128,256 units in 1934. The 1935 volume represented 36.4 per cent of the entire volume of industry. In 1934 Ford accounted for 31.8 per cent of the industry total. Ford's increase in 1935 volume over 1934 of 44.9 per cent compared with a general improvement for the industry of 26.4 per cent.

The Ford V-8 led all other makes in sales of both trucks and commercial cars in 1935, the registration figures showed.

L. & N. SHOPS CLOSE

Louisville, Ky. — Louisville and Nashville Railroad shops employing more than 3,000 men were closed on Monday of this week except for a skeleton force, and J. B. Hill, president, said they probably would remain closed the entire week.

"Beginning next week at the latest," said President Hill, "we plan to resume operations on a five day week basis in order to retain as many of our men as possible. Since September we have been working the largest shop force we have had since 1930. A sharp decline in freight traffic, principally coal, during the last two weeks, made it necessary to curtail operations."

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Hood and little daughter, Helen, visited relatives in Birmingham over the week end.

shall establish, organize, and maintain a liberal system of public schools throughout the State." The laws of this state make it mandatory for the State Board of Education to "seek in every way to direct and develop public sentiment in support of public education." It is of prime imortance that the people of Alabama know that schools in 46 counties have already closed short of normal terms, and the schools in most of the other counties will soon close if the State's financial aid is not provided quickly. School terms were extended on Federal Relief for two years prior to this year. Three years ago 27 counties in Alabama ran their white elementary schools less than 100 days and 10 of these operated elementary schools less than 69 days. The school term was less than 61 days in 648 schools. The average rural elementary school term was five and a half months. As a result of these short terms over 60 per cent of the children failed of promotion.

This makes the four year during which approximately 90 per cent of our rural schools and many of our city schools have closed or will close short of a normal term, or would have closed had it not been for Federal Relief funds. Federal Relief funds are not available to schools this year. Unless the Legislature provides the revenue quickly, much of the millions already spent will be wasted because our children cannot be promoted. The running of the schools on relief and their closing without relief is convincing evidence that the schools need additional funds in order to operate, in spite of all claims, mathematical calculations, and charges which can be made to the contrary. The records in the state department of education and the budget signed and sworn to by the chairman of the board of education and the superintendent of each county and city school system in the state show that the present legislative appropriations are needed to run the schools normal terms. The Legislature, in its regular 1935 session, made a careful study of the calculations of the State Department of Education based on reports from county and city boards of education showing the amount of funds needed for schools and they were sufficiently convinced of the need to vote unanimously for appropriations sufficient to run the schools normal terms. However, the legislature lacked $3,800,000 of providing revenue sufficient to pay the appropriations in full. The governor stated in his message to the members of the legislature at that time that revenues were not sufficient to pay the appropriations in full and that he would call them back to Montgomery for a special session for the purpose of raising the revenue when the amount of additional revenue needed could be determined. When the special session convened, the governor came before them and declared that over four million dollars additional revenue should be provided in order to supply $3,800,000 necessary for education and amounts needed education and the amounts needed for health and relief.

What has happened to the reported increase in tax collection this year over last year? Over one million dollars of the reported increase in tax collections came from gasoline taxes ear-marked for the highways and it cannot be used for education. A half million of the increase is from the income tax which is ear-marked for debt service. The schools are getting only the increase in state tax collections which are ear-marked for schools, which is more than offset by decreases in local revenues.

It is quite natural for the public to want to know if the lack of revenue to run schools is due to an increase in school expenses. I believe that you will agree that the schools have a record in economy in that although the average attendance in the state has increased approximately 10 perc ent, school costs, even if appropriations are paid in full, have decreased over one million dollars since 1930.

Charges have been made that the State Superintendent has withheld the Stephens report from the public. While I have not seen the Stephens report, I am convinced from my conferences with Mr. Stephens that his report is on the audit of the funds needed by the schools on a relief basis and is of no value in determining the actual amounts needed. I asked for a copy of the report but I could not get one and I emphatically deny the report has ever been filed with me or with the State Department of Education.

The statement is sometimes made that the State Department of Education uses the state funds appropriated to the public schools. It should be clearly understood that none of the state funds for elementary and high schools are used by the State Department of Education. The appropriation of the state to maintain this department is from the general fund and has been reduced 53 per cent. The highest annual salary paid any individual under my direction is $2,400. The total annual salaries of the State Department of Education under this reduction are sufficient to run schools four and a half hours, or .7 of a day.

There are a few who would neglect our colleges. To fail to support college education with public funds is to deny all except the wealthy the privilege of education beyond the high school. Without publicly supported colleges class education prevails and the door is shut to the ambitious and talented boys and girls who, because of financial conditions, have no means with which to attend college. The colleges get only 26.43 per cent of the amount the Legislature voted as necessary for their proper maintenance. These institutions cannot long continue to operate under such conditions. The elementary and high schools could operate only four and ninety-seven hundreths days on the state funds now going to the colleges on the basis of present estimates.

The State Department of Education has consistently advocated parity in the distribution of state funds. However, the department has opposed parity plans which apply only to minor employees, exempting department heads, and parity plans abolishing ear-marked funds for public education so drawn as to give elementary and high schools less money than they are now receiving. The Department stands for a Constitutional parity plan which applies to all departments alike, without exception, or parity to be achieved by earmarking sufficient revenue for education to pay all appropriations to education in full.

Some claim that Alabama is too poor to support adequate schools. The reverse is true—Alabama is too poor not to support adequate schools. According to estimates of the State Tax Commission, Alabama will spend approximately $17,000,000 for tobacco this year, yet it is spending only approximately $15,000,000 from tax sources for elementary and high schools for the same period. Other states in the Union are spending a higher percentage of their income for education than Alabama. Alabama at present is spending 2.76 per cent of its annual income for education compared with a national average of 3.64 per cent and with the average of the southern states of 3.19 per cent. Some who are opposed to additional taxes claim that Alabama pays a higher percentage of its total income for state and local taxes than the other states in the Union. Again the reverse is true. Ten southern states pay a higher percentage of their income for state and local taxes than Alabama, and only one state in the union pays a lower percentage.

The teaching profession is not charged with the responsibility of determining how the revenue is to be raised but it is charged through the State Board of Education with the responsibility of directing and developing public sentiment in support of public education.

When the public schools first faced what has become a series of lean years, many cried out against what they thought was a failure on the part of educational leadership to secure sufficient revenue with which to carry on.

In response to calls issued by the Department of Education, the Alabama Education Association, the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, school administrators, teachers and parents began assembling themselves in various types of meetings throughout the state to become acquainted with actual facts relative to support of public education in Alabama. As rapidly as teachers, superintendents, and parents became acquainted with these facts, they realized the importance of arousing and developing public opinion for adequate support of good schools by all citizens. Today the result of these efforts is so great that we find practically every teacher and every other person connected with the schools much better informed and thoroughly aroused over the continued distressing situation.

All school people who have made any contribution to a better understanding of the school condition are to be commended for their earnest study and good work. Let us not falter here, for this work is not yet finished. Public opinion has decided the fate of schools, and will continue to do so. The future of schools is dependent upon continuing interest of all the people and a growing understanding of their state school system. May I urge that you work continuously with the people of your communities; ask them for their opinions and their questions. Give them accurate information, frankly, fearlessly and honestly. Help them to understand what you are trying to do for their children and how their money is spent. Do not be afraid of questions and opinions, for you have nothing to hide.

The members of the Legislature as a whole are representatives of the people and will pass the laws which the people urge them to pass. If the majority of the people fail to inform the Legislators of their needs and their willingness to pay for the education of their children, sufficient revenue is not likely to be provided. If a majority of the people urge the Legislators to levy sufficient taxes to keep the schools open, they will unquestionably do so.

Farmers Union Demands Twenty Cents A Pound For Cotton

Resolution of County Organization Calls Upon Congress For Enactment of Minimum Price Law For Staple

Whereas Southern farmers pooled millions of bales of cotton with the government under the 10 and ½ cent loan, hoping to get 20 cents a pound for it and

Whereas speculators have been permitted to sell to themselves and among themselves for the past two years more than three hundred million bales of cotton they never had and never expected to have merely to depress the price of cotton and rob the farmers of half its value and

Whereas, they are now selling cotton down and threaten to depress the price below the 10 cent loan and not only rob the farmers of more than four hundred million dollars and cause the government to lose more than three hundred million dollars and people be taxed to pay for it and

Whereas, Congress is the only power that can fix and protect the price of cotton, prohibit importation of cotton until manufacturers have used all the cotton of American farmers and prohibit short selling.

Now, therefore, be it resolved, that we, the Shelby County Farmers Union, in convention assembled, demand that our representatives and senators in congress from Alabama do everything in their power to obtain the passage of a law fixing the price of cotton at not less than twenty cents a pound, prohibit the importation of cotton until the manufacturers have used all the cotton of the American farmer and prohibiting contracts for sale of cotton on the exchanges at any price except that fixed by the government under penalty of fine and imprisonment.

Be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be furnished the newspapers with a request for publication.

M. R. Douglas, Sec'y.

Men's Bible Class

Before now you have knowledge that the Men's Bible Class, which meets on Sunday, April 12th at 10 a.m. in the Strand Theatre, will be taught by Dr. Lee M. Brooks, professor of Sociology at Alabama College. Formerly, the class has enoyed these talks by Dr. Brooks so much that a large class is expected. Furthermore, the subject for the day will be "Punishing the Criminal"—a theme in which we are all interested. And another attraction is that Dr. Brooks will lead the discussion. So you are urged to avail yourself of the remaining hours and read books on the subject. Everyone is invited to attend.

Wildlife Research To Be Made

Montgomery, Ala. — Alabama is shown to be in the van of cooperative research in wildlife management in a report recently made public by I. T. Bode, head of the Division of Wildlife Research in the U. S. Bureau of Biological Survey.

Cooperative research investigation are under way in nine state land grant colleges to determine how to increase, maintain and employ wildlife resources and demonstrate how the facts discovered by the research can be given practical application.

Funds to maintain these research stations are derived from the Biological Survey, the American Wildlife Institute, the colleges in which they are located and the conservation departments of the states in which they operate.

Harold S. Peters is in charge of the Alabama research station, with headquarters at Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn.

The station was located at Auburn because Alabama is typical of the gulf states section and has problems identical with those of Georgia, northern Florida and eastern Mississippi. Investigational work has been undertaken by Mr. Peters in this state on the mourning dove, Bobwhite, turkey, white-tailed deer, fox and waterfowl food plants.

A survey of nesting doves already is under way and tests are planned of quail food and cover plants on Alabama soil types; also of the fire ant damage to hatching quail. A study of the turkey, with which Alabama has experimented successfully, also will be conducted and a private preserve will be used to show practical management methods in the propagation of several game species.

Plans for graduate assistants and faculty participation are soon to be completed, and a detailed program of educational work is being worked out.

Thomas H. Maxwell, Farmer, Candidate For Congressman

The Following Statements Were Given by Mr. Maxwell Last Week When He Visited Montevallo In the Interest of His Campaign

Mr. Thomas H. Maxwell of Woodbank Farm, Tuscaloosa, whose announcement as a candidate for Congress to represent the people of District No. 6, appears in another column, enjoys the distinction of residing in the same district in which he is a candidate. Mr. Maxwell endeared himself to the aged people and also to the young and medium aged people for being the first in the district to advocate a federal old age pension of $30 per month for those whose incomes were below $1,000 per annum, administered by states.

He was the first to advocate in 1931, cotton crop control by states, which idea was adopted by South Carolina and Louisiana in the fall of 1931, which laws wese repealed in the early part of 1932, because the other cotton states were inert. Mr. Maxwell, however, was undaunted. He wrote the governor of a state whose farmers could not grow cotton and received a reply dated October 12, 1931, at Warm Springs, Georgia, saying in substance: "We are going to do something to improve the whole cotton situation," signed Franklin D. Roosevelt."

Mr. Maxwell kept up correspondence with New York's governor and convinced him that farmers of all staple products needed governmental cooperative control of both prices and production to insure to the grower above cost for his products. All this was happening prior to Mr. Roosevelt's nomination to which goal he aided and saw him triumphantly elected.

On Mr. Maxwell's recommendation and that of E. A. O'Neal, Mr. Roosevelt commandeered Senator Bankhead to engineer through the senate the Bankhead Cotton Act making Bankhead's name a household word among the farmers and all citizens.

Mr. Maxwell, in asking the people to elect him to congress, wishes to be in a position to render more positive aid in repealing bad iaws and enacting good laws in accordance with our best of Constitutions to insure to the people of all stages of property ownership a sufficiency of Constitutional money and that without borrowing, for congress, the creator of money should never be forced by simple minded congressmen to borrow its own creature.

Mr. Maxwell believes that the state by law, should help the farmer to receive a just price for his cotton seed oil, linters, meal and hulls and the meal and hulls should pass through live stock on their way to enriching the soil that produced the cotton.

Mr. Maxwell has, in his mature seniority of 63 years, an honorable ambition to serve in the body which controls the purse strings of this patriotic nation to the end that misery-causing panics of evil men should never be and that peoples' savings shall be insured.

THOMAS H. MAXWELL

Mr. Maxwell contemplates serving in a statesmanlike manner, devoid of cheap-skate politics and devoid of using public patronage in any other than an honorable way.

Mr. Maxwell's father, James R. Maxwell, served as a Confederate in the war between the states.

Mr. Maxwell, the subject of this sketch, is a widower, father of two lawyer sons who live in Havana, Cuba, who will be glad to see my friends when they visit Havana in June. Mr. Maxwell is a graduate of the school of engineering, University of Alabama, an S. A. E., a Spanish War eVteran, a World War veteran, with seventeen months service in France in the A. E. F., a Legionnaire, and a V. F. W. He studied the history of American political government under Col. Thomas C. McCorvey at the University.

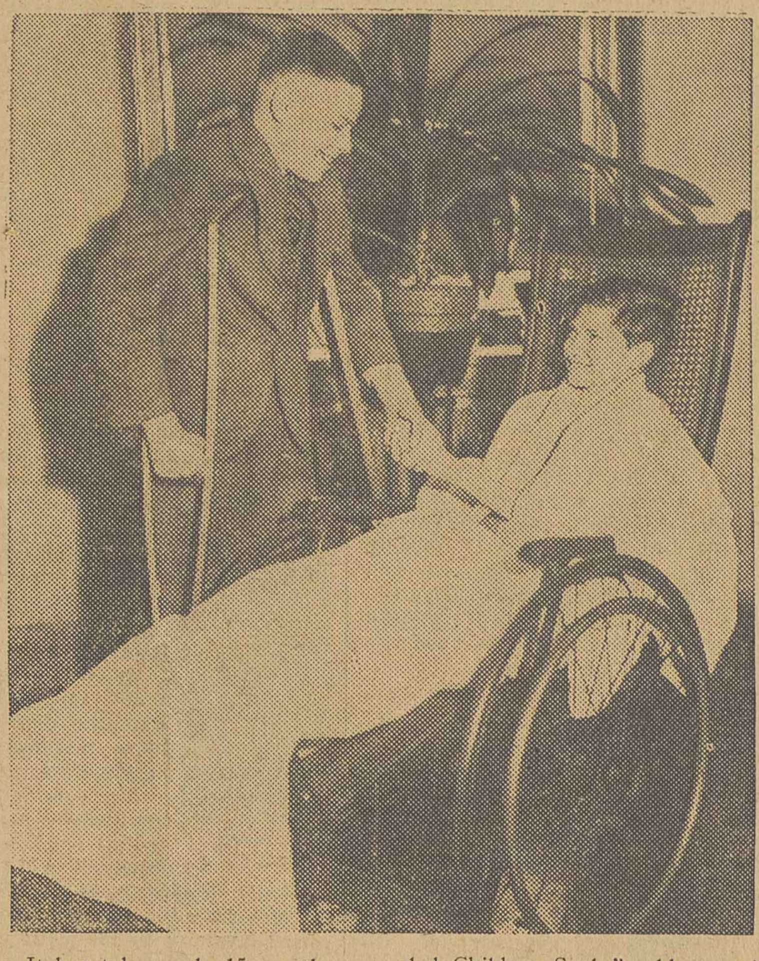
Farmers are asked to rally to the polls on May 5th, rain or shine to support this man while the all other citizens are actively giving their support to a member of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. Maxwell received, dated June 13, 1932, at Albany, N. Y. the following: "Dear Mr. Maxwell: You know, I think, how much I appreciate your patriotic devotion to national good as well as your loyalty to those whom you believe worthy to be our leaders. Yours very sincerely, (signed) Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I desire the support of the gray haired, young and middle aged voters on May 5th, 1936, whether it rains or shines. Pass the message by word of mouth, postal card or letter to the voters in our own county of Tuscaloosa and to those in Bibb, Chilton, Greene, Hale, Perry, Shelby and Sumter and lets try to make it unanimous. Hale has had two of her native sons in the position, and should as a matter of fair play allow Tuscaloosa to put her native son in Congress on May 5th, 1936.

Easter Seal Sale To Raise Funds for Cripple Children

Alabama Welfare Department Has Organized State-Wide Movement Active In Every County During This Week



It has taken only 15 months to put Robert on his feet (soon there will be two instead of four) in this ultra-modern hospital for crippled children. Surely that justifies Steve's hope that perhaps even sooner he'll be up and out again, with Robert as playmate in the world of physically whole boys and girls.

Scenes such as this would not be possible were it not for folks who care enough to finance hospitals and convalescent homes in which crooked feet and arms and backs can be made straight, or straighter.

Of growing importance as a means of providing and supporting such institutions are "Crippled Children Seals," sold annually at Easter time.

This year's design shows a prototype of Robert or Steve, in the form of a crippled lad sitting with his crutch on the threshold of "The Door of Opportunity."

"Open Wide the Door" is the Seal Slogan. Beyond the door can be visualized endless possibilities for physically handicapped youngsters; for the pennies and dollars invested in these tiny, appealing stamps in Easter motif will help lift the burden of crippledom.

In this Community and State the Seal sale opened on Aphil 2 and continues until April 11 Penny Easter Seals help crippled children.

Shelby County Is Organized For Seal Sale During This Week

Miss Annie Louise Pruitt, director of the Shelby County Department of Public Welfare, on a visit to Montevallo Saturday, reported the completion of a most efficient and satisfactory organization in the county for carrying out the Seal Sale for cripple children, which is in progress this week, and terminates next Sunday, Easter.

Shelby County has been allotted 30,000 seals, Miss Pruitt said, which the organization will sell at a penny each. The fund thus created will be used in the interest of providing correction and treatment for cripple children. Seventy per cent of the amount will remain in Shelby County for use in our own local cases. Thirty per cent goes to the Alabama Cripple Children's Association. The funds that remain in the county for local use will be matched by state and federal funds.

In her survey of the county for organizing the seal sale Miss Pruitt reports that she found the citizens in all communities ready to assist in the movement with a surprisingly fine spirit. "I am delighted with the manner in which the movement was received in the different communities," she said, "and I feel sure that the organizations that have been set up will easily sell all of the 30,000 seals that have been allotted to us."

Following is the personnel of the seal sale committees as organized and announced by Miss Pruitt for the different localities:

Siluria, 1,000 seals, Mrs. John Denham and Miss Lexie Lowery.

Wilton, 250 seals, Miss Jean Logan.

Wilsonville, 1,000 seals, the Wilsonville school children.

Vincent, 1,000 seals, the Vincent school children.

Alabaster, 200 seals, J. E. Walker chairman of committee.

Aldrich, 1,000 seals, Mr. Chapman and Mr. Street.

Calera, 1,200 seals, sponsored by the Unique Club, Mrs. Guy Roberts, president.

Columbiana, 5,000 seals, Mrs. Lena Merrill and Mrs. John Curlee.

Dogwood, 1,000 seals, W. B. eVrnon and Lester Booth.

Helena, 500 seals, five school girls, Dora and Rebecca Payne, Margaret Roy, Vivian Mullins, and Eunice Nunnally.

Montevallo, 5,000 seals, the Montevallo Home Economics Club, Alabama College Home Economics Club, Sociology Department, Alabama College, Montevallo Civic Club.

Pelham, 250 seals, Misses Willie and Boyd Brasher.

The following home demonstration clubs of the county will sponsor sales of seals in their communities: Calcis, 500; Dargin, 1,600; Camp Branch, 1,000; Fourmile, 200; Midway, 100; Shelby, 200; Vincent, 500.

12 Arrested Last Sunday By City Chief

Town Marshal, C. M. Gardner, had a rushing business last Saturday night and Sunday, during which time he made twelve arrests for law violations of the Town of Montevallo.

Classification of the charges made against the twelve showed eight for gaming; two for public drunkenness; and two for reckless driving. All of those arrested were negroes, except one for public drunkenness.

Mr. Gardner says he has decided to have a little cleaning up of law violators here and see if it will help out the situation.

Trade Building Campaign Here Begins Friday

First Big Event Day Will Be Saturday April 25

A group of merchants and business men of Montevallo have agreed to cooperate in carrying out a trade-building campaign that will, no doubt, prove the most attractive proposition ever presented by this community. The desire of those who have gone into this program is to bring more people to Montevallo to buy their merchandise. Primarily, they recognize the necessity, first, of causing more people to come to Montevallo, instead of going to other places. The plan they have adopted will bring the folks to town. It will make you want to come to Montevallo instead of going to other places.

The first big event day of this trade-building campaign is set for Saturday, April 25. On this day every person for miles around will want to be in Montevallo, and we can safely guess that you will be here. Just wait until you have seen the complete details of this trade-day proposition. Circulars giving full information will be distributed this week.

These circulars will be distributed this week end, and will give the list of the merchants and business houses offering this attractive proposition to each and every person who buys anything at the stores named.

As the circulars will explain, you do not have to wait to begin getting the advantages offered. Commencing Friday of this week the cooperating stores will begin to offer these wonderful advantages to every person who buys anything from them.

Get ready for the thrill of a lifetime. Come to Montevallo from now on. When you get here, ask one of the cooperating merchants about the trade building proposition, and you can see in a minute that you will want to keep on coming here to do your buying.

Suggestions For New Farm Plan

COUNTY AGENT ADVISES TO PLANT MANY LEGUMES AS POSSIBLE

To aid you in planning and planting your crop this year and still be able to take part in the Soil Conservation Program, I am going to give you a few of the main principles.

Cotton is about the only crop in Shelby County that will come in for payment for diverting acres to soil conserving or soil building crops.

In most cases, if cotton is not increased over last year, you will be in line for this payment. You can get payment for 35 per cent or less of your base cotton acreage; in other words, you are to decide how much you want to leave out up to 35 per cent. To get the payment for leaving out cotton, it will also be necessary to plant 20 per cent or 1-5 as many acres in soil building crops. Legume hays are soil conserving crops. Cowpeas, soybeans, and velvet beans interplanted with corn will count 50 per cent soil conserving crops; that is, to have 10 acres of soil conserving crops, it is necessary to plant 20 acres in corn and cowpeas, soybeans, or velvet beans.

If you turn under 10 acres of good vetch or Austrian peas this spring, it will entitle you to $20 payment, if you have 20 acres of soil conserving crops this year. This will be explained more in detail later.

As a general rule, I would advise planting as many acres of legumes as possible on your farm, for this will help in getting the payment for leaving out cotton, terracing land, and turning vetch and Austrian peas.—A. A. Lauderdale.

Legion Rally At Gadsden April 14

The third annual spring rally of Alabama Legionnaires will be held in Gadsden, Tuesday, April 14. All Legionnaires in Alabama are urged to attend this conference.

An interesting and instructive program has been arranged for this rally that will cover every phase of the Legion's program. In addition to Legion subjects, representatives from the Resettlement Administration and the Federal Housing Administration will be there to give the veterans information regarding these two federal agencies, and explain the benefits that the veterans may receive from them.

Announcement comes from Legion Headquarters here that the rally will be held in the magnificent municipal auditorium that has just been completed. It was also announced that the Gadsden Post has made ppreparations to show all visiting Legionnaires a real good time. Committees have been named and plans have been completed for a banquet at the Reich Hotel at 7:00 P.M., followed by a dance in the municipal auditorium. All visiting Legionnaires holding a 1936 American Legion membership card will be admitted free to the dance.

Before Long Supervision Will Be Our Only Task

Inventive science and new machinery have changed everything. Where the worker formerly began and finished one complete article, he now attends to one small operation, turning a few screws, putting on a wheel, driving a few nails, spraying with paint, tacking on heels or uppers.

With electricity everywhere, work has changed. The housewife turns a switch, a machine does the washing; a vacuum cleaner does the sweeping; turns another switch or burner and finds "heat" ready-made.

Everything is time-saving, trouble-saving. The people do their shopping, selecting at home in the advertising column, and through advertising they learn of things unknown to them before and find that they need them. Civilization approaches the stage when pressing a button and starting the machinery working will represent a physical day's labor, with only supervision afterward.—Arthur Brisbane in Cosmopolitan.

Man's Friends Glad He Told Them About Black-Draught

Writing from Texarkana, Texas, Mr. W. T. Bentley, of that city, says: "I have been using Black-Draught for fully forty years. I would have a bad taste in my mouth and headache. I knew I needed a laxative — something to cleanse the system. I would hunt up the Black-Draught and take a dose. I would be relieved in a few hours. In Black-Draught I have found a simple remedy — one that does not have any after-effects. I do not know of anything better to take for a dull, tired, listless feeling. I have recommended Black-Draught to many friends and neighbors. I know they have been glad that I did, for they have said so."

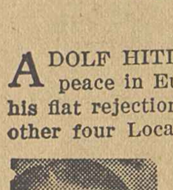
Hitler's Peace Proposals Scouted by France—Big Italian Victory May End Ethiopian War—Lowden for Republican Key-Noter.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

ADOLF HITLER'S proposals for peace in Europe, together with his flat rejection of the plan of the other four Locarno powers for settlement of the Rhineland situation, were handed to British Foreign Minister Eden by Joachim von Ribbentrop, and passed on by Eden to the French and Belgian ambassadors in London. The British cabinet thought the German scheme worthy of consideration, but the French government looked upon it as a "cunning plan" to split the Locarno powers and make Hitler the virtual dictator of Europe. Premier Sarraut and Foreign Minister Flandin were consulting on steps for frustrating the reichsfuehrer and preserving a united front of the Locarno nations.



Adolf Hitler

Hitler's note made these proposals:

1. A "standstill" agreement to exist on both sides of the German border for four months during which Germany, France, and Belgium would make no troop movements. This "armistice" would be guaranteed by a neutral commission.

2. A 25-year nonaggression pact between Germany, France, and Belgium, guaranteed by an international arbitration court, to be negotiated immediately after the French elections.

3. Negotiation for nonaggression pacts between Germany and her other neighbors.

4. Germany to return to the League of Nations as an equal if the league covenant is separated from the Versailles treaty and with the understanding that colonial concessions will be made.

5. When a general settlement is in sight conferences to be held to secure the prohibition in warfare of gas, poison and incendiary bombs, bombing of civilians, bombing of towns more than 12 miles from the battle zone, and the abolition of heavy tanks and heavy artillery.

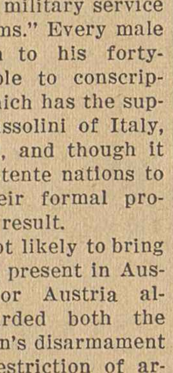
6. A general economic and disarmament conference.

FOLLOWING the example of Germany, the Austrian diet has repudiated that nation's military obligations under the St. Germain treaty. By unanimous vote it approved a bill introduced by Chancellor Kurt von Schuschnigg, providing for general national military service "with or without arms." Every male from his eighteenth to his forty-second year is liable to conscription. This move, which has the support of Premier Mussolini of Italy, was not unexpected, and though it aroused the little entente nations to anger, probably their formal protests will bring no result.

The new law is not likely to bring any great change at present in Austrian armaments, for Austria already had disregarded both the treaty of St. Germain's disarmament provision and its restriction of armaments without serious objection from other countries. Tanks, forbidden to Austria under the treaty, were actually paraded around the Ringstrasse some months ago under the eyes of foreign military attaches whom she had invited to attend.

Hungary may now be expected to violate the treaties and rearm, that, too, being a part of Mussolini's policy.

PEACE negotiations between Italy and Ethiopia, outside the League of Nations, seem imminent, for emissaries of Emperor Haile Selassie already have been received by Marshal Pietro Badoglio, and the Italian undersecretary of colonies is in East Africa to conduct the preliminaries. This news followed closely the dispatches telling of a great victory won by Badoglio's northern troops over 20,000 fresh and picked Ethiopian soldiers whose fight was directed and watched by the emperor himself. The battle, at Mai Ceu, lasted all day and the Ethiopians left 7,000 dead on the field as they fled to join the main body of 50,000 troops south of Lake Ashangi eight miles away. Italian fatalities included 16 officers and about 1,000 soldiers, most of the latter being Eritrean Askaris. It was believed Marshal Badoglio would follow up this victory with a smashing blow at Dessye, main concentration point of the Ethiopians, unless peace negotiations stop him.



Marshal Badoglio

Just before this battle the Italian air bombers practically ruined Harar, second city of Ethiopia.

GERMANY'S men and women to the number of 44,389,140 declared by their votes in the reichstag elections that they supported the policies of Hitler. Only 542,898 had the nerve to vote against the reichsfuehrer, and a still smaller fraction refused to go to the polls. Among the latter were the former Crown Prince Ruprecht of Bavaria and his wife.

Hitler's victory was thus extraordinarily complete, and the Nazis celebrated it with wild rejoicings in Berlin and other cities. It was the culmination of a three years' campaign in which the leaders sought to persuade the population of the reich that only Hitler could save the country from great danger.

The new reichstag will be the largest in history, having about 740 members. Most of them will be officials of the Nazi party.

For the first time in the history of aviation a polling booth was established in the air. It was aboard the new dirigible Von Hindenburg, whose 104 passengers and crew voted solidly for Hitler. The Hindenburg and the Graf Zeppelin cruised over the Saar and the Rhineland all day long.

LEADERS of both major parties are perfecting the arrangements for the national conventions and picking out the chief orators for those occasions. The Republicans have tentatively selected Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, as temporary chairman and key-noter of the gathering in Cleveland. If this choice stands it is presumed the permanent chairman will be an Easterner, possibly Walter Edge of New Jersey, former ambassador and senator.

F. O. Lowden

Some Western governor is wanted by the Democrats as their key-noter, and the honor may be given to Paul V. McNutt of Indiana, C. Ben Ross of Idaho or Clyde C. Herring of Iowa. For permanent chairman at Philadelphia Senator Robinson of Arkansas is likely to be picked. The speech putting President Roosevelt in nomination for a second term may be delivered by Senator Wagner of New York.

New York Republicans of the Old Guard persuasion scored a decisive victory over Senator Borah in the primaries, and the Empire state delegation to Cleveland will be unpledged to any candidate. The triumph of the conservatives was complete. Not only were the Borah candidates defeated in nine congressional districts in which they made contests, but the organization candidates for delegates defeated independent candidates not pledged to Borah in three other districts.

The Kentucky state Republican convention instructed the four state delegates at large to vote for Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas for the Presidential nomination. This, with previous developments, assured Landon of 18 of the state's votes.

WHILE a house committee is delving into the financial operations of the Townsend plan organization, Dr. Francis E. Townsend announced in Washington a complete reorganization of "Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd." The shake-up followed a split between Representative John S. McGroarty of California, who has pushed the Townsend plan in the house, and the California doctor. Doctor Townsend accused McGroarty of conniving to convert Townsendites in California to the Democratic party.

Townsend said henceforth the movement would be managed by a board and that he would present to it 90 per cent of the profits of the Townsend National Weekly. The national headquarters of the movement will be moved from Washington to Chicago, which was chosen for its central location and accessibility.

Another new policy of the movement will be the selection of an auditing firm to regularly audit finances and report to the directors of each of the Townsend clubs.

Townsend will remain as president. His board of directors was named as follows: Gomer Smith, Oklahoma City, vice president; Gilmour Young, San Francisco, national secretary; Dr. Clinton Wunder, New York, J. B. Kiefer, Chicago, Frank Arbuckle, Los Angeles, and Nathan J. Roberts, Jacksonville, regional directors; and Alfred Wright, Cleveland, Ohio, manager.

WILLIAM N. M'NAIR, the Democratic mayor of Pittsburgh, appeared as a witness before the house ways and means committee and was almost thrown out on his ear.

Unable to halt McNair's biting tirade against wasteful spending on the one hand and the proposed new punitive tax on corporation earnings on the other, Chairman Robert L. Doughton threatened to call a policeman bodily to evict the mayor.

"Why all this dignity?" shouted McNair. "Good night!"

A committee clerk brought a policeman to the front of the room as the congressmen quickly passed a resolution to excuse the witness. McNair said he would leave "gladly" and departed.

CITATIONS were issued by the Post Office department against alleged lottery associations operated by Mrs. Oliver Harriman, prominent in New York society, and Alfred E. Smith, Jr., son of Al Smith. They and others associated with them were summoned to appear in Washington and show cause why fraud orders should not be issued against them.

According to the charge, both persons are operating lotteries. Mrs. Harriman heads the "National Conference on Legalizing Lotteries, Inc.," and Smith heads the "Golden Stakes Sweepstakes."

DESPITE vigorous opposition, which will reappear on the floor of the senate, the senate committee on immigration and naturalization reported favorably the Kerr-Coolidge alien deportation bill, which Secretary Perkins has been trying to get through congress for three years. It will give her and two other members of an interdepartmental board discretionary power to harbor radical and even criminal aliens, otherwise deportable, in this country. The same bill recently was reported favorably by the house committee.

Secretary Perkins

Pending action by congress on the measure, Secretary Perkins has been holding up the deportation of some 2,800 aliens mandatorily deportable under existing law, contending that they are "hardship cases." Some are radicals, some have criminal records, and others entered the country illegally. By "hardship cases" Secretary Perkins means that they would be separated from family ties or put to some other inconvenience.

Secretary Perkins refused to produce information respecting the 2,800 "hardship" cases until Reynolds introduced a senate resolution, whereupon she permitted him to examine the records.

UNABLE to raise $3,200,000 to redeem two bond issues reaching maturity, the province of Alberta, Canada, defaulted. Premier William Aberhart, leader of the Social Credit party, admitted he could not get the necessary funds. In last fall's election the Social Credit party won a big victory. One of the planks in its platform advocated the payment of $25 of social credit "dividends" monthly to every citizen. None of these dividends has been forthcoming as yet.

THOUGH Koki Hirota, the new Japanese premier, said a few days ago that while he was in office there would be no war, it is evident his government really is looking for serious trouble with Russia. This feeling is expressed by Eiji Amau, spokesman for the Tokyo foreign office, who said: "Japan must prepare for Soviet aggression."

Eiji Amau

Recent activities indicate the Reds are availing themselves of the critical situation which developed after the recent military revolt in Tokyo and are increasing the strength of their troops along the Manchukuan border."

Amau said the "recent Soviet policy has been to fire on any persons near the border." He said he regards this as rather strange behavior for a "friendly neighbor."

The tension was increased when Moscow learned there had been heavy fighting in Outer Mongolia, ally of Russia, where Japanese and Manchukuan troops had crossed the border. B. S. Stomaniakov, Soviet vice-commissar for foreign affairs, told Japanese Ambassador Tamekichi Ota that the situation did not permit "waiting pacifically for development of events."

He declared "serious responsibility" would fall on the shoulders of the Japanese government if the fighting in Outer Mongolia were allowed to continue.

At the same time the Manchukuo government issued a warning that unless the Outer Mongolian government "takes immediate steps to terminate all kinds of provocation against Manchukuo's frontiers, the relations of the two countries are threatened with the most serious contingency."

Hachiro Arita, who became foreign minister of Japan, said he did not think the border incidents would break up relations, but a recurrence would be dangerous.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—Some years ago when Reed Smoot of Utah was a member of the senate where he enjoyed a long and meritorious service, he ventured a prophecy. It was this:

Smoot's Prophecy

"The cost of government has increased every year, and it will continue to increase. I care not what party is in power, that result will obtain."

As I recall, Senator Smoot's statement was made about eight years ago and it was made at a time when the Republicans, of whom the Utah senator was one, were in control in the senate. His statement came as a result of an immense amount of jibes that were being hurled at the Republican majority. The Democrats were having a grand time, kidding the Republicans who were then in complete control of the government.

Senator Smoot recognized that which few in responsible positions in the government recognized, or if they did recognize the fact, they chose not to admit it. Nevertheless, the senator's statement is true today as it was true when he made it and for many years before.

The Smoot prophecy comes to mind now because of the sudden acceleration of moves to curtail government expenses, to reorganize the scads of New Deal and emergency agencies, to eliminate overlapping functions among these agencies, and, in general, to put the house of government in order.

Two such efforts are under way. One of them was initiated by Senator Harry F. Byrd, Virginia Democrat, who succeeded in obtaining senate recognition of his charges that there was tremendous waste, that there were useless agencies and that, in addition, governmental functions were being generally messed up because none except the old-established units of government knew what they were doing. The Virginia senator obtained adoption of a resolution providing for a general survey and recommendations for the clean-up. It was a situation in which even the most ardent New Dealers could not find an excuse for objecting to it. So the senator took the lead.

Subsequently, President Roosevelt reached the conclusion that something ought to be done in the way of untangling the tangled skein of governmental functions so he proposed a survey under his direction. He appointed a committee of so-called experts to go over the problem.

Thus, at the start, at least, it appears that the taxpayers are going to be favored by a break. I think it ought to be added, however, that no one has had the temerity to suggest that either the Byrd survey or that engineered by Mr. Roosevelt will yield very much.

The survey promoted by Senator Byrd will dig up a good many helpful facts but there is every reason to believe that the Virginia senator will find many obstacles placed in his way and that he and his committee will be unable to present any comprehensive statement on their findings to the country in advance of the November elections. The same is true concerning the survey directed by the President, only more so. The cold fact is that there is no chance at all for the President's committee to even approach the stage of making recommendations from their survey until long after the elections are held. Frankly, each of these surveys is permeated with politics, so much so that a straightforward accounting or general description of the affairs of government will not be allowed to become public property and thereby become a campaign issue. Of the two, Senator Byrd's proposal has the better chance, but that is rather small.

Dig Up Helpful Facts

Adverting to the Smoot prophecy, it is therefore of no great importance whether a thoroughgoing examination of the governmental structure that has grown up in the last three years under President Roosevelt is made in advance of the elections. These New Deal agencies have been created and these New Deal agencies, like many of the "Old Deal" agencies, are with us to stay and suck up taxpayers' money for quite some time. I need only remind you that we still have in existence the War Finance corporation and the railroad administration that were created as war-time agencies, not to mention a dozen other similar units.

It is possible, indeed, I think it is probable, that there will be a trimming of pay rolls in many of the New Deal agencies immediately after election. There certainly ought to be important curtailment of expenses and of the list of employees, but accomplishing that is a matter much more easily described than done. So, I feel safe in saying that all of this ado about a reduction in governmental swelling amounts to nothing more than just ado.

In making the statement above that the outcry about reducing the government pay roll and untangling the functions is just so much ballyhoo, I think it ought to be said at the same time that New Deal spirits are rising. There was a time a few months ago when the national trend was decidedly against Mr. Roosevelt. It even went so far as to cause many individuals to say that Mr. Roosevelt would be defeated for re-election. The picture around the first of April was quite different. There is in Washington quite a general feeling that the Roosevelt re-election chances have improved and are continuing to improve. This condition is quite evident to observers continuously on the job here for even in the personal manner of the President himself there is an outward appearance that he believes the situation is well in hand.

New Deal Spirits Rise

As far as I can discover, one reason why the New Dealers feel so much better is that events leading up to the national Democratic convention seem to be cleared of any harassing possibilities.

I am sure that it will be recalled how something like the blues overcame many New Deal stalwarts after former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, 1928 Democratic Presidential candidate, let loose a blast at the New Deal in his Liberty League dinner speech. I happened to be in a position to know that the Smith speech caused all kinds of commotion and fear among New Deal leaders. They know, as everyone else knows, that "Al" Smith has a big following. When he threatened "to take a walk," he let loose a declaration that was charged with dynamite and the New Dealers could not calculate how much dynamite.

Now, however, it appears quite certain that much of the danger inherent in the Smith declaration has been eliminated. Notwithstanding the Smith indictment of the President for repudiation of platform promises and his description of the Roosevelt policies as "a national menace," there is going to be a pitifully small number of anti-New Deal Democrats in the Philadelphia convention. The number will be so small, in fact, that however vociferous they become, their shouts will be heard no more than the wail of a child in a storm.

It was to be expected, as I have reported to you before, that the routine type of Democratic politician will forget any differences he has with the New Deal and be regular at convention time and during most of the campaign. That type of politician, be he Republican or Democratic, cannot afford to bolt. If he bolts, he cuts off his own nose and most politicians do not enjoy being de-nosed for that is tantamount to being politically dehorned. So, while the Philadelphia convention of the Democrats may have some seething underneath the surface, it is without the realm of possibility that there can be any important revolt against renomination of Mr. Roosevelt.

Inasmuch as the New Dealers can properly regard their situation pretty well in hand, they naturally can feel a bit cocky over the difficulties in the Republican ranks. First, the Republicans are at a disadvantage in that their convention in Cleveland is to be held at an earlier date than the Democrats meet. This, however, is more real than apparent. It is thus because of the intra-party battles that appear certain to come to the surface at Cleveland. The Republicans are not together, not unified, on anything. A half dozen candidates with appreciable followings are snapping at each other and two or three factions are announcing almost simultaneously what the platform is going to say. It just cannot help leading into a beautiful mess at Cleveland unless the Republican leaders show more intelligence than they have shown thus far.

G. O. P. in a Hole

In the meantime, the Democrats are making note of the various battle charges. You can be sure they will use them. Whoever the Republicans nominate at Cleveland necessarily faces a big fight but as the situation now stands, I think the Democrats will be able to make it an offensive campaign whereas ordinarily the party in power must give over much of its campaigning to a defense. This is true unless the Republicans can get together and take the offensive themselves by criticizing and attacking on a united front.

Of course, much water can run under the bridge before the November election. It is always possible that the party in power can make mistakes, can be led into a blind alley under the political guns of its opposition.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China. The lad, Barry Gilbert, does not recollect ever having had a mother. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter for his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later.

It was years before Barry was old enough to put the two things together. "Did she die when I was born?" he asked then, and got no answer. This was in San Sebastian, where the old man worked for an engineering concern. Afterward, they pushed on to England. From there, it was Hong Kong, where Francis Gilbert came home one night with a fever, and died the next morning.

Barry had begged a clerkship in Hong Kong, and then worked his way to San Francisco. On the boat was a movie director. "You've got a great smile," he told the youngster. "I think I can use you." Hollywood, then. Youth, and looks, and the ingratiating grin helped a lot there. And Barry learned a lot, too. He was earning two hundred dollars a week, sometimes, when a wallet vanished from a coat thrown over a table "in the set." The Duke knew who took it. She was a poor little thing, though, and desperate, and His Grace kept his mouth shut. They couldn't pin it on him, he said, and they didn't, but there were no jobs after that.

And so he'd come East. Ankle-deep in the sand, that morning at Southampton, he kept thinking of the letter he'd just burned. And of his own mother. He had missed her all through his childhood, watching the other boys with their mothers.

At noon Evans brought the car.

"You want to get lunch, don't you?" the chauffeur asked.

"I want to see the end of the island. We can eat anywhere."

The Duke sank back into the cushioned seat. Along the highway they sped.

The car was slowing down now, and, looking ahead, His Grace saw another limousine drawn up at the side of the road. Evans threw out the clutch, and then put his foot on the brake.

A husky young fellow in uniform was standing in front of the other car. Beside him was a spare, white-haired gentleman. And, framed in the car's doorway, ready to alight, stood a pretty girl.

"Stop," said the Duke, quite supererogatorily, since they had stopped.

She was the prettiest girl he had ever seen, the Duke decided. Tall and slim and dark, dressed in an ensemble of hunter's-green tweed, with a top coat to match, and a tiny felt hat perched upon her sleek black hair. Her eyes were gray, the Duke was to discover later, and wide, and a little cold. Her lips were bright red against the pale ivory of her face.

"Can I do anything for you?" inquired the Duke.

He was standing before her now, and her glance took him in, calmly, appraisingly, before she answered, "No, thanks."

And with that, Barry felt, she erased him from the landscape.

"Yes, you can," said the white-haired gentleman. "That is, if either of you knows anything about a car. My chauffeur doesn't."

"We'll be glad to try," the Duke said, cordially. "Have a look at it, will you, Evans?"

"It's the ignition," the other chauffeur told him.

The two men began fussing with the engine.

"It's got to go," fumed the white-haired gentleman. "I haven't had a bite since breakfast, and I'm due in New York at five o'clock."

"Hungry myself," said the Duke. "Where did you mean to eat?"

"Twin Bays Golf Club," replied the gentleman. "It's only about three miles up this road."

"Well," the Duke suggested, "if you're in a hurry, why don't you let me take you there? Then Evans and I can come back, and have another try at this."

"That's very kind of you, but I've a better idea. You say you're hungry, too. Why don't you lunch with us, and leave your man to do the rest?"

"Swell!" said the Duke. "Evans, drive us to the Twin Bays Golf Club, and then come back to this job."

Barry turned round to look for the girl in the green dress. She was whispering to Evans, the other side of the stalled car.

Then: "You're Mr. Ridder, aren't you?" the girl asked.

And before Barry could reply, she went on: "Your man told me. I thought I recognized the car."

"John Ridder's son!" exclaimed the white-haired gentleman. "Well, I am surprised! So you've made it up with your father, have you? You must have heard him speak of me. I'm Judge Hambidge."

"Not Judge Curtis Hambidge?" Barry said, omitting to add that he had seen the name in yesterday's newspaper.

"The same," replied the Judge. "Your father and I are—well, we've known each other since he came down to Southampton, three years ago. This is my daughter, Patricia. Pat, for short, though it takes courage to call her that."

He laughed.

Patricia looked straight ahead.

"Where is your father?"

"On his way to Bad Nauheim."

"That heart of his, eh? Well, I'm glad you two got together at last. It's been killing your mother. I suppose you're going to spend the season here, now."

"I don't know—yet," answered the Duke.

"Well, I would. This is your chance. Make good, and the old man'll be ashamed of himself when he comes back. Haven't got a job, anywhere, have you?"

"I had a job a few months ago," observed the Duke.

"What happened?"—with a disarming smile. "Did they want you to work?"

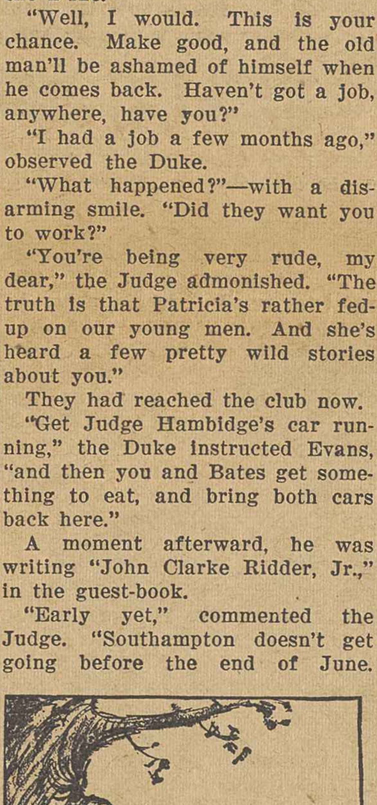
"You're being very rude, my dear," the Judge admonished. "The truth is that Patricia's rather fed-up on our young men. And she's heard a few pretty wild stories about you."

They had reached the club now.

"Get Judge Hambidge's car running," the Duke instructed Evans, "and then you and Bates get something to eat, and bring both cars back here."

A moment afterward, he was writing "John Clarke Ridder, Jr.," in the guest-book.

"Early yet," commented the Judge. "Southampton doesn't get going before the end of June. We're opening our house next week. How's your place? Still got Willetts?"



"It's Got to Go," Fumed the White-Haired Gentleman.

"Yes."

"Good servant, Willetts. How about a little salmon salad, Mr. Ridder?"

"Salmon salad—with mayonnaise, please."

He smiled, remembering yesterday's hot-dog at Huntington.

"Rather a coincidence, meeting you here," he said. "I'd just seen your name in The Globe."

The Judge's brow clouded.

"Yes. Your father's newspaper. They say I'm a Tammany judge, robbing the peepul."

"It's always easy to work up excitement about the under-dog," Patricia cut in. "As though it really mattered what happened to the underdog."

"You don't like rich men's sons," the Duke remarked, "and you don't like under-dogs. Just whom do you like, Miss Hambidge?"

"People who make their way."

"Can't you feel sorry for people who don't?"

"Not very," she admitted, frankly.

"I suppose you'll be keeping bachelor's hall most of the summer," suggested the Judge. "You'll have to make yourself at home with us. I'm a widower, and away a good part of the time, so you and Patricia can fight things out on the tennis court." He glanced at his watch. "We'll be down for good the first of next week. How about dining with us Thursday?"

"Please do," smiled the girl.

"I should be delighted," said the Duke.

"At eight? Don't dress. We wear flannels most of the time out here."

"Flannels it is," said the Duke.

Purring softly, as though nothing had ever been wrong with its vitals, the Judge's car drew up to the steps.

"Until Thursday, then, and thank you for the lift. I'm mighty glad to have met John Ridder's boy."

"I'm glad, too," added Patricia, giving him her hand. "Maybe I'll learn to like rich men's sons."

"Or under-dogs."

"That sounds a little more improbable," said the girl.

They drove away.

"Montauk Point?" Evans asked, holding open the car door.

"No," the Duke answered. "I've changed my mind about Montauk Point. Some other day. I think we'll go home now."

CHAPTER II

WELL, of all the mad resolutions!

"I'm going to wind up in prison," reflected the Duke. "And, as a good many wiser men have done, on account of a girl."

"A snip of a girl, at that!"

He grinned at that.

"Stop at the railway station," he instructed the chauffeur. "I've got to see about my bag."

But, oddly enough, the bag hadn't arrived.

Willetts had been very apologetic about sending the master away for lunch. "It's cook, sir. She's new, and, what with the kitchen all upside down—"

"Don't worry," interrupted the Duke. "I had a capital time. But what are we going to do about clothes, Willetts?"

"Well," the butler responded, "there's your father's tailor, sir. Crowell, on Fifty-first street. You could start an account there, sir. And Mr. Ridder Senior gets his haberdashery at Bartlett's, and his shoes at Kennedy's."

"All that takes time," Barry objected, "and I'm going out to dinner next Thursday. I haven't a shirt to my back, Willetts, or anything else but father's purple pyjamas."

Willetts' face brightened.

"If you can wear those, sir, I don't see why you can't wear Mr. Ridder's linen—in an emergency, sir. There's a whole high-boy full of it in your closet, sir. And he's got a dozen summer suits in that cedar chest."

"Flannels, too?"

"Oh, plenty of flannels," answered Willetts. "And golf trousers. They're sure to fit."

Both men smiled.

"What's the matter with Evans?"

"He seems morose," said the Duke.

"The fact is, Evans' wife is very ill, sir."

"In Patchogue?"

"Yes, sir. We left her there. That's what made us late last night."

"Go on."

"That's about all, sir. Mrs. Evans has been ill some time. It's a kind of anemia, sir. Evans didn't want to leave her. When he found he was coming out here—only yesterday, sir—he asked Mr. Ridder if he could bring Mrs. Evans. There's quite a big room over the garage. And Mr. Ridder said, 'No.' And then Evans decided to put her up in the village for a few days. But she was taken bad at Patchogue, sir, and we had to leave her at a hotel. Evans was a good deal upset."

"I see," said the Duke.

He thought about the matter all through dinner.

As he was quitting the table, "Willetts," he said, "I think you'd better tell Evans to go back to Patchogue, and get his wife. Tonight, if she's fit to travel. My father won't know anything about it, and it seems a pity to waste that room over the garage."

"Yes, sir," said Willetts.

He went on thinking about it before the fire.

"The trouble with people like my father," he ruminated, "and Pat, is that they don't know what it is not to have enough. They've never known, or they've forgotten. We must've experienced things to have any feeling about them. If you see a man shot, you're horrified. But if you read about fifty thousand men killed in battle, it doesn't mean much to you."

"My father—"

And suddenly he realized that, when he said, "My father," he was thinking of John Clarke Ridder.

"If I stayed here a month," he reflected, "I'd be calling the old man 'Dad.' Already, I'm calling the girl 'Pat.' Making myself at home —that's what I am. Better clear out after dinner next Thursday. Or after breakfast Friday. I'm simply ruining my appetite for baked beans!"

Willetts interrupted his meditations.

"Evans would like to know if you'd see him, sir."

"Of course, tell him to come up."

He had an embarrassing ten minutes with the chauffeur—embarrassing, but very heart-warming. The surly Evans was transformed. Barry never had seen anyone else so grateful.

"Tell you what we'll do," said the Duke. "I've got to go to town to get some clothes and things. I'll ride with you to Patchogue, and take the train there. You can bring Mrs. Evans home, and I'll take another train out from New York."

Evans tried to speak, but without success.

At the door Evans turned.

"I'll get square with you for this some day," he said, and gulped hard, and left the room.

Mr. Crowell was most obliging. Duke remarked, "I've just come up from Florida, and lost my baggage en route. I've got to have a suit by next Thursday. Can it be done?"

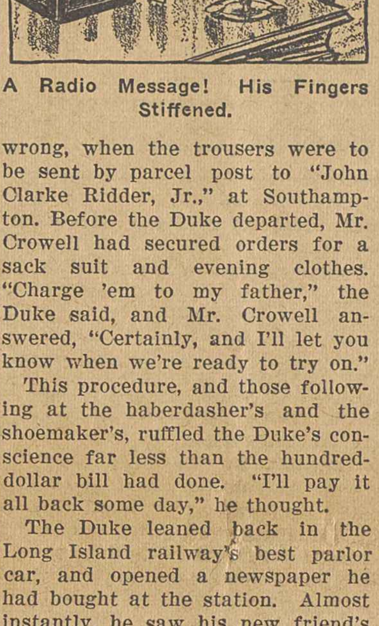
"I'm afraid not."

"Can you make a pair of flannel trousers by then?"

"I think so."

"Go to it," said the Duke.

He caught Mr. Crowell inspecting the tag sewn onto the back of his waistcoat. Well, that was all right, and, of course, nothing could be wrong, when the trousers were to be sent by parcel post to "John Clarke Ridder, Jr.," at Southampton. Before the Duke departed, Mr. Crowell had secured orders for a sack suit and evening clothes. "Charge 'em to my father," the Duke said, and Mr. Crowell answered, "Certainly, and I'll let you know when we're ready to try on."



A Radio Message! His Fingers Stiffened.

This procedure, and those following at the haberdasher's and the shoemaker's, ruffled the Duke's conscience far less than the hundred-dollar bill had done. "I'll pay it all back some day," he thought.

The Duke leaned back in the Long Island railway's best parlor car, and opened a newspaper he had bought at the station. Almost instantly, he saw his new friend's name again. "Jefferson Street Condemnation Just Another Grab," the headline ran. "Civic Association Brands Proceedings Before Judge Hambidge' as Bare-faced Loot of City Treasury."

"They're certainly making it hot for him," Barry mused.

He wouldn't have read the story, but for its reference to the Judge. Even so, he read it very casually. Somebody wanted to turn a side street into a boulevard. That involved buying a lot of property. And the property owners weren't willing to sell for what the city was willing to pay, so "condemnation proceedings had been instituted"—whatever they might be—and Judge Hambidge was to fix the value of the ground and houses.

"Who really owns this property?" the Civic association asked. The corporation that held title was an obvious stalking-horse. It had been formed, and had purchased the land, and buildings, only a few months before the beginning of municipal interest in Jefferson street. And it was demanding a million and a half for "a few relics of a better day in this neighborhood that would have been dear at half a million." Tammany's paw was visible in the whole transaction, according to the Civic association, and the impending decision called for prompt action from individuals and organizations aware that Judge Hambidge was a Tammany judge.

Reaching home, he went straight to the library.

The Duke's gaze fell upon an envelope addressed to his other self.

A radio message! His fingers stiffened.

The Judge hadn't waited to write. Damn Marconi! Feverishly, he tore open the wrapper.

"Just to let you know that I am very happy stop couldn't sleep last night for thinking of you home at last stop can't tell your father yet stop please please try to spend summer in such a way as to make reconciliation possible stop praying for word on arrival stop God bless you and love. Mother."

For once, the Duke didn't grin.

"She didn't care what it cost," he said, but there was no humor in that comment. He was picturing a hurried, heart-hungry woman, slipping furtively up to the wireless room, and handing in this message herself, so that no steward should unwittingly betray her. The first word she had been able to smuggle to the boy in years. "It's been killing your mother," the Judge had said.

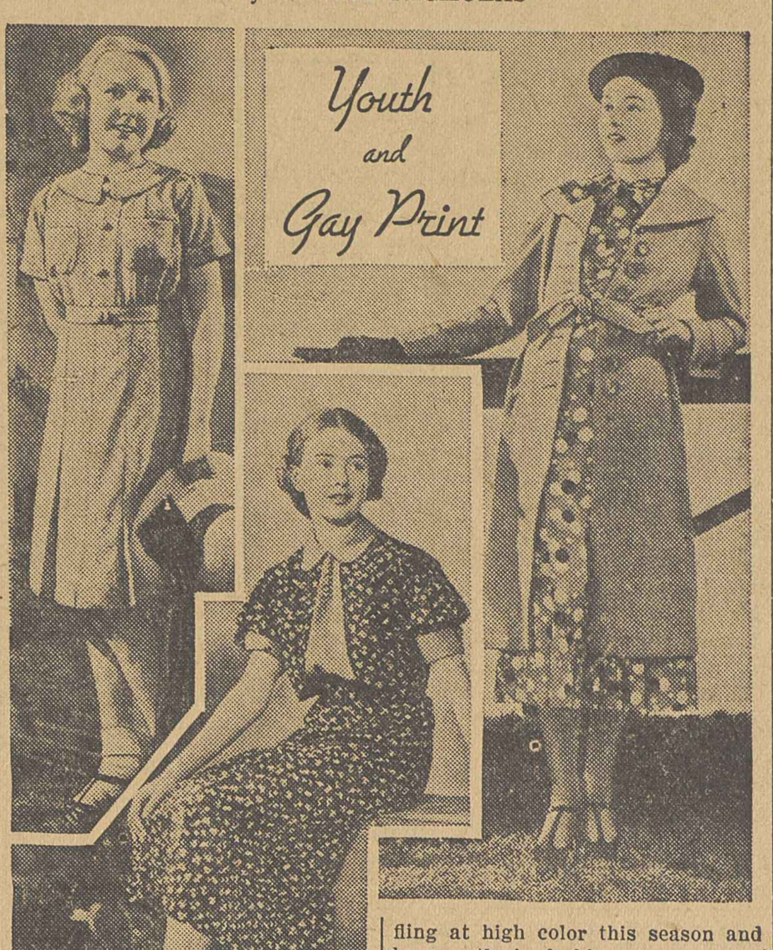
Smart Silk Prints for Young Girls

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



FOR as refreshing and lovely a threesome as ever fancy can picture, we suggest the alliance of springtime, youth and gay silk print. In the new season's style parade it is very evident that designers of young-girl fashions are all enthusiasm over joyous colorful printed silk crepes and silk taffetas.

Agreed that pretty young girls and happy bright prints belong together, the next logical step is to plan the wardrobe of Miss Sweet Sixteen and her younger sisters accordingly. To secure satisfaction in selection of a voguish silk print for the junior miss be sure that it be as practical as it is attractive. Meaning, one should choose from standpoint of wearability as well as intrigue of color and patterning. See to it that the silk you are buying is that sterling it will not pull at the seams or crumple because of artificial weighting. Only good silks can be depended upon to dry-clean like new, while many of them may be tubbed with perfect confidence in a happy outcome. Which accounts for an ever increasing demand for pure dye all-silk prints instead of shoddy weaves that make a grand "first appearance" and then begin to lose their glamor from the day they are worn. More and more women are coming to realize the economy of getting the best.

Printed silk crepe is a favorite for practical daytime wear. The key to silk prints for spring and summer is color in vivid, virile hues as inspired by Van Gough, celebrated Spanish painter. Of course if pastels are your choice you will find them most delectable in the new showings, otherwise take a fling at high color this season and be smartly in fashion.

Silk crepe in red with white and black bubble print, as shown to the right in the illustration, lends itself admirably to the spring costuming of a young girl. The skirt of this chic outfit is pleated. Red buttons and a boutonniere animate the gray coat. The coat is extremely practical in that it can be worn as a separate wrap, and a high-style wrap it will be, for gray is a most talked of color. Gray shoes, gray hats, gray weaves, gray summer furs are made a feature in many fashion previews.

It is indeed a dainty silken frock which the smiling young miss to the left in the group is wearing. Tiny crossed golf clubs designfully pattern this simply tailored silk crepe frock. Novel patterning distinguishes the new silks. Most amusing and very smart are the silks with little animal figures, flying birds, music notes and the newest is vegetable prints with of course a comprehensive showing of florals. Tiny floweret print crepes are charming for little girls. White crochet buttons give an exclusive hand-made touch to the cunning dress pictured.

Before the season is far spent every young girl will be coveting a bolero costume such as are outstandingly fashionable at present. So see to it that the young girl's wardrobe includes a bolera outfit to wear in the spring style parade. Prints made up in bolero fashion are a "last word" in swank, The model which the little lady seated in the foreground is wearing is made of printed taffeta. The blouse of French blue silk crepe is gathered to the skirt. The jacket is removable and the collar and cuffs of the blouse are worn outside. Notice the short puffed sleeves of the jacket. The jacket, either Eton, bolero or of basque with a peplum persuasion made of printed taffeta worn with a plain skirt is a high fashion for spring.

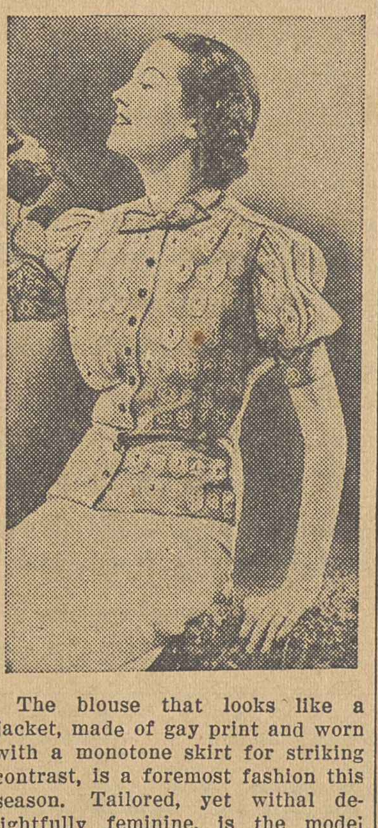
JACKET BLOUSE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



The blouse that looks like a jacket, made of gay print and worn with a monotone skirt for striking contrast, is a foremost fashion this season. Tailored, yet withal delightfully feminine, is the model pictured. It is made of a Sumatra cotton print and its tropical coloring is fascinating. The band-collar ends in a little tab tie. Similar banding finishes the full short puff sleeves. Wear the blouse tucked inside or out over the skirt —the new bolero suits call for the former.

Angel Robes

Some of the novelties featured in the fall openings in Paris were long monk's capes, angel robe evening gowns and floating Grecian draperies.

THREE-PIECE SUIT HOLDS HIGH PLACE

Because it is smart and practical, the three-piece suit has always held a high place in the feminine wardrobes. Outstanding in this mode is an attractive ensemble of soft wool in small checks of beige and wine red. Four patch pockets, cut on the bias, trim the tailored jacket which is styled with erect revers and a belt of wine red leather.

The knee-length overcoat is cut on swagger lines with mannish revers. With the ensemble is worn a red velour hat, wine and beige silk scarf and other accessories of wine red.

New Petit Point Luggage Recalls Old Carpet Bags

Reminiscent of the carpet bag our forefathers carried are the modern pieces of petit point luggage.

These bags, fashioned from petit point and leather, are right enough to please the airplane traveler and handsome enough to delight the most fastidious. Incidentally, a petit point make-up and overnight case harmonizes nicely with any other type of luggage.

You might keep this in mind the next time you start out to buy gifts.

Newest Type Shirtwaist to Wear With Spring Suit

While it contrives to maintain a shirtwaist aspect, the newest type to wear with the spring tailored suit takes on beguiling feminine lace edging and frills. Those with bosom fronts formed row-and-row of tiny frills or lace edging are favorites. They have youthful turnover collars either pleated or with round corners and lace-edged. The very latest in sleeves is the short puff with bandings of lace or pleated sheer.

HELP CRIPPLED CHILDREN

The crippled child is one of the most recent types of human need to have the active interest either of individuals or the public. The Great Teacher many years ago effectively gave the world the principle. "We are our brother's keeper." During the period that he performed miracles the crippled people were ministered unto, along with others. Since that time little that was constructive has been done for the crippled person until the past few years. The world was in darkness as to how to help its physically handicapped members.

Not until discoveries of great surgeons made possible the advance in medical science has society known how to help its crippled children. Such advances have made it possible to transplant muscles, to straighten, lenghten and shorten limbs; to rebuild diseased bones; all of which may be looked upon as modern miracles.

This advance in modern science was closely followed by a corresponding advance in social-mindedness in many countries, and states of the United States. In 1926 there was organized the Alabama Society for Crippled Children, a lay effort to stimulate interest of the public in the proper care of our handicapped youngsters. Alabama in 1927, through a legislative appropriation, made some provision for her crippled children to receive care and treatment. A great many have been ~~helped, many~~ have been completely restored. Yet, the financial help for crippled children has been so limited that hundreds of crippled children in Alabama are hopefully and patiently waiting "for the door of opportunity to be opened wide." They ask only to be given a chance physically and educationally, so that they may be able to take their places in civic, social and economic life along with that large group of physically normal people. They want to live at their best — they want a chance to develop so they can count for the most — they want the spiritual satisfaction of life.

Who is not inspired by the appeal of the little crippled child and the tremendous opportunities for service in its behalf?

You can contribute to this worthy cause by purchasing Easter Seals this week. Elsewhere in this paper you will find full information about the plan from Miss Annie Louise Pruitt.

THE WINGS OF DEATH DARKEN THE SKY

There is little joy of Springtime in Alabama today, for out of the night sky have swooped the winds of terror, and death and destruction were their toll. Alabama and its neighboring states lie stricken. With heavy hearts they count their dead and reckon their losses. Little does it matter to them that the flowers are abloom in the woods and the trees are freshly green. The Winter of sorrow is upon them and the chill of bereavement is in their hearts.

To care for the dead, that is the first task—to gather up their broken bodies and lay them away for the eternity that suddenly plunged upon them. It is no light task, and no easy one, for the victims are to be counted by hundreds. Men, women, children, all fell before the storm that chooses its sacrifices without discrimination.

But after that task comes the harder and longer one of caring for the wounded and the bereft. Orphans have been created, parents made childless, and thousands have lost their homes and possessions. There is no happiness for some, except in the realization that the hand of neighborliness is extended to them.

But the tragedy of it all should not chill us to inaction. Rather it should move us speedily and generously to render aid. For who knows when some other night the clouds and winds may break in fury upon us and we then shall cry aloud?—Birmingham News.

CIVIC CLUB

The Montevallo Civic Club will meet at the Baptist Church on Wednesday, April 15, at 12:15. An interesting speaker will be present. All the members are requested to attend.

THE COMMUNITY WORKER

There seems to be some curiosity on the part of the general public as to just what the community worker does. This item is an attempt to answer this question. The Community Worker, who is associated with the department of public welfare, works with community groups — Parent-Teacher Association, American Legion Posts, Girl Scouts, Men's Clubs, Women's Clubs, School organizations and church organizations, in an effort to interest the above-mentioned groups in community betterment in general and community recreation in particular.

Miss Margaret Hodo, who is the community worker in Shelby County, has visited Columbiana, Calera, Siluria, Maylene, Straven and Montevallo. In each town she has talked with interested individuals and community groups, and in Straven and Maylene definite plans have been made for a Boy Scout Troop and for a Mother's Social Circle. The Community worker has no money for recreational equipment or leadership, but her services are available to any organization which would like to have her help in planning a recreational or community project which they as a group might undertake.

Washing One's Hands

By Augustus J. Cox

The act of "Washing One's Hands" is a duty performed by adults. The duty to children is boresome and an unnecessary responsibility. How trite a theme and what superficial sentences! But recall to your mind another act of "Washing One's Hands."

Jesus appeared before Pilate. The multitude cried for the release of Barabbas rather than Jesus. The governor said weakly "Why, what evil hath he done?" But the multitude cried out the more, "Let him be crucified." Pilate, then, took water and washed his hands before the multitude saying, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person; see ye to it."

I consider this act one of the weakest instances in literature. I hold Judas to be infinitely the higher type. In the same chapter we are told that when Judas saw Jesus had been convicted he sought to return the money to the priests and elders saying, "I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood." He was repulsed. But it meant a whole lot to Judas and he went out and hanged himself. He was a hero; Pilate a despicable coward. Pilate was a ward politician who would ease his own conscience by washing his hands of any responsibility. He was a man who could neither say yes or no. Such is a weak character.

What more is there to say? The sermon is ended. There is only one thought, namely, that he who washes his hands of any responsibility, regardless of the cost—he of all creatures is most lame.

This is a period in the year when we should think of our relation to the program of the Church. Rather than merely feed our souls, or stimulate our intellects, we should be challenged to assume a personal responsibility in the advance of the Kingdom. Most of us simply "wash our hands."

Enter another field. Take our children. We have given them food and an education. They attain late adolescence. They begin dictating to their parents. We will not be bothered longer, every effort has been in vain. So what some parents do, is—wash their hands. I can hardly conceive of such, but it is rather common.

In the field of friendship. An unkindness has been done. The tender ties of friendship have been strained. "What's the use," says one, and washes his hands of further relationship. Such is unworthy the hallowed word "friend."

It's strange—this urge in the human heart which keeps you tied to an unworthy and failing proposition. The loyalty of a wife to a worthless sot. The faith of a mother in a wayward lad. Eternity is builded upon such loyalties. I doubt if there lives a person whose life is so unworthy that anyone has the moral right to wash his hands of responsibility. That is what's the trouble everywhere today. Loyalty is a forgotten term. As soon as loyalty misuses us then we wash our hands. "Washing One's Hands" is selfishness of the more polite form. The most unhappy man I know is one who sought to get away from folks and social responsibilities and live alone and independent of others. He washed his hands. Now life has washed its hands of him. It is peculiar—when you wash your hands of something — something washes its hands of you.

As I think of the sins of church members, I can frankly and honestly say none is as great as the act of washing one's hands. A man I know wasn't paid his salary. It affected him humiliatingly. The situation in his home was drastic. He was inclined to "wash his hands," but won a great victory when he said, "I'll go on as if I were to be here 26 years." He will win.

In church work, who is affected? A man doesn't like me—so he quits. Christ is crucified. One feels too much money is spent on unnecessary things and he retires. Christ is crucified. A program is assumed and because it isn't conducted as certain individuals would conduct it they "wash their hands". Can't you see the analogy? Pilate—washing his hands; Christ—crucified!

Should a Democrat give up his citizenship in the United States and go to Russia simply because the Republican policies are contrary to his? Of course not. Neither can a member of the Christian Kingdom turn heathern simply by the act of washing his hands.

These are poison laden sentences. The poison can kill, or stimulate inactive organisms. Our church program has begun. What will you do? Wash your hand—and crucify Christ, or labor energentically toward the end of establishing His Kingdom.

Judas was a hero in comparison with Pilate. Let us this year exterminate Pilatism and enhance loyalty. Let us wash our hands of selfishness and sin, and make them clean to cleave to Him.

Home Demonstration Notes

Easter Greetings:

With the coming of Easter we greet the year's greatest festival, and at the same time we hail the advent of Spring, when all nature is born anew and the spell of winter is broken. Everything in the plant kingdom takes on new life. It is also the time when we should take on new life in the animal kingdom. May we, the Home Demonstration Clubs of Shelby County, extend to you Easter Greetings: with every wish for your health and happiness. May this be one joyous occasion. May we be filled with new life, new ambition, new determination and new inspirations and aspirations.

We would also like to take this occasion to express to the Home Demonstration Clubs and their members a word of gratitude for the cooperation with the sale of Easter Seals for the benefit of crippled children.

Spring Recipes

April Sunshine Cake—5 egg yolks, 1-4 teaspoon salt, 1-2 teaspoon of cream of tartar, 7 egg whites, cup finely granulated sugar, 1-2 teaspoon lemon extract, 1-4 teaspoon orange extract, 1-4 teaspoon almond extract, 1 cup pastry flour.

Directions: Beat the egg yolks until thick and lemon colored. Sprinkle salt and cream of tartar on the egg whites and beat until stiff. Fold in the sugar and extract. Then fold in the egg yolks and, lastly, the sifted flour. Bake in an ungreased angel cake pan in a slow oven (300 degrees) for about one hour. Invert and cool before removing from pan.

Roast Chicken with Oyster dressing—1 roasting chicken (4-5 lbs), 1 pint oysters (chopped), 4 cups dry bread crumbs, 1-8 teaspoon pepper, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons of butter (melted), clix (melted).

Directions: Dress and clean the chicken. Make a stuffing by combining the oysters, bread crumbs, seasonings, and melted butter. Then stuff and truss chicken. Brush chicken thoroughly with melted clix. Place in a roasting pan, cover and roast in a moderate oven (350 degrees). Allow 25 minutes per lb for roasting a 4 or 5 pound chicken.

I wonder how many of us have ever thought how famous our food traditions are. Some of our traditions that are common to the different sections of the country are as follows:

Hot biscuit. Who has not heard the Yankee express his delight with the famous hot biscuit of the South, together with the Southern hospitality?

Boston will always be famous for its baked beans, and so will Maryland be known for its turkey and sour kraut. As you know all Southern Texas is famous for Mexican Chili. From Southern California we have the Avacado and Artichoke; from the north central states famous steak dishes.

The following are lines two hundred years old found in Old Chester Cathedral, England; called "A Prayer."

Give me a good digestion, Lord,
And likewise something to digest,
Give me a healthy body, Lord,
With sense to keep it at its best.
Give me a healthy mind, good Lord,
To keep the good and pure in sight
That seeing sin is not appalled,
But finds a way to make it right.
Give me a mind that is not bound,
That does not whimper, whine nor sigh,
Let me not worry overmuch
About the fussy thing called "I",
Give me a sense of humor, Lord,
Give me the grace to see a joke,
To find some happiness in life
And pass it on to other folk.

HOTPOINT ELECTRIC RANGE

COOKING ELECTRICALLY IS THE MOST ECONOMICAL WAY OF COOKING THERE IS!

But even if you choose to consider only the cost of the current, an Electric Range is economical—so low are electric rates in Alabama.

So why deny yourself longer the pleasures of an Electric Range?

Park Reciprocity Urged by Lieber

Winter Park, Fla.—Col. Richard Lieber, president of the National Conference on State Parks, at his winter home here, said that the regional meeting of the conference at Fort McClellan, Ala., this week will afford park and conservation authorities of the Southeastern states their first opportunity to discuss formally the administration and maintenance of the state parks which have been developed by the Civilian Conservation Corps within the last three years.

"There was a time," he pointed out, "when a state park was a place of scenic or historical interest only to the state in which it was located. But the coming of twenty million automobiles and endless stretches of highways has made the state park an attraction for the people of other states as well."

Colonel Lieber, who came to the United States a half-century ago, developed Indiana's famed park system.

"It behooves all states to acquire state park lands of high value," he said, "and develop them by sound planning into public areas with strong appeals to an appreciation of the virtues of outdoor recreation, which has been aroused in the American public in the last few years.

"There should be places where all people from all states can gather and associate with each other amid pleasant, natural surroundings and become even better neighbors—places where they can commune in common ownership of a nation endowed with a variety of scenic beauty unparalleled."

Colonel Lieber and Robert Fencher, director of the National CCC program, were among the 200 persons at the Fort McClellan army post for the park conference this week. They came to Alabama after a tour of Florida CCC park projects.

CCC companies have developed 130,000 acres of new state and local parks and recreation areas in the Southeast in the last three years, and have worked under joint supervision of the National Park Service and the various state and local park and conservation authorities.

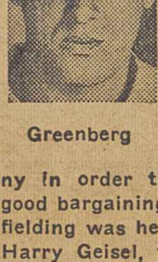
Box Score Is Mum on Cards Wanting Reserve Infielder

THE Cards would like to trade a pitcher (preferably Walker or Hallahan) for a reserve infielder (Jimmy Jordan or Woody English). Such a deal would strengthen the Gas House gangsters at the one point where they now are woefully weak. . . . Although he claims he is happy, Al Lopez looks thin and peaked and his friends insist the former Dodger catcher would love to be traded to some club with a chance. . . . Charley Roman, the umpire, has a 391-acre farm in Kentucky. He quarters 30 to 500 horses and mules as well as 50 to 60 milch cows on it.

Cy Perkins, the Tiger coach, is the best piano player among the athletes now stationed in this state. Ethan Allen and Pitcher Pete Appleton (nee Jablonowski) are the runners-up. . . . Braves Field (or whatever they call the present Boston Beehive) is the toughest of all big-time parks in which to catch foul balls. That is because the wind plays queer tricks while whistling through the high stands.



Greenberg

Some of his pals insist that Hank Greenberg's hideout was partly inspired by the rule which prevents first basemen from attaching those oversize nets to their gloves this season. They say that Hank never was a good fielder until this gadget was invented and that he knows he will slump without it now. So he asked a pretty penny in order that he might be in good bargaining position in case his fielding was held against him. . . . Harry Geisel, the American league umpire, and Mel Harder, the Cleveland pitcher, can (and loves to) do card tricks.

Otto Miller probably is fixing to get himself tossed out of the "them was the days" union. The Dodger coach says that it is much harder to hit now than when he was a star. Claims that the pitchers mix in too many curves, screwballs and knucklers along with the fast ones.

Lee Ballafant, the newest of National league umpires, is a snappy young fellow but players are complaining. They say he passes judgment on curve balls too quickly.

Breadon, Card Prexy, Has a Menagerie

In addition to owning the Cards, Sam Breadon also has title to half a dozen saddle horses, 12 dogs, a flock of guinea pigs and a six-foot snake. . . . The Brooklyn training camp score card lists eleven club officials, starting off with Prexy Steve McKeever and winding up with a scout named Melville G. Logan. . . . Ben Geraghty, the Villanova basketball captain who is one of the most promising of Dodger rookies, studied journalism at college. . . . Bookies, several of whom operate in the New York rings, are still being shoved around by the Miami Pinks. . . . There is some little discontent at the Babe Ruth homestead because so few photographers drop around this year.

Torchy Koda, the very good Japanese golf pro who has been so popular with the galleries during his present tour, is only five feet tall and weighs only 125 pounds. . . . Charlie O'Hearn, the Yale back who now operates on Wall street, is the closest pal of Tom Yawkey, the youthful Red Sox Midas. . . . There is no need for Connie Mack to be jealous, though. Mr. O'Hearn has no ball players to sell. . . . Although one of his sons is only three years old and the other seven, the forehanded Freddie Lindstrom already has registered them for future admission to Notre Dame. . . . Mickey Cochrane says it is tougher to find good catchers than any other kind of ball players nowadays.

Joe Dimaggio, the most talked about (and probably the best) ball player in the South this spring, has found something to worry about. This is the first time he has been far away from the family fireside and he has noted no symptoms as yet he fears that he eventually will become homesick. . . . The Phils turned down Burgess Whitehead before the Cards traded him to the Giants.

THE following is what a reporter gets for going to the dogs: There are four states in which dog racing is legal — Florida, Arkansas, Massachusetts and Oregon . . . Tracks also are permitted to operate in 14 other states by—let us call it — special arrangement with local authorities . . . It is estimated that more than 15,000,000 witnessed the races last year . . . Greyhounds, generally considered the fastest of all animals at any distance up to 550 yards, naturally are preferred to whippets . . . A greyhound in full flight averages 35 miles an hour.

They are not raced until they are fourteen months old . . . Females usually continue in competition for three years, while males usually campaign a year or more . . . Then, even though they still retain their speed, they are retired for breeding purposes.

Blood lines are as important as among race horses . . . War Cry, owned by W. R. Burnett, the author, is the Man o' War of the dogs . . . Aside from starring in a movie, he won 44 races in one year and was out of the money only four times . . . Other great sires are Traffic Officer, who goes back three dog generations (12 years), Meadows and Playgoer.

Greyhound's Dinner Will Cost You a Quarter

When in training the dogs are fed only once a day . . . On days when they are not racing they dine at six o'clock . . . On working days (Florida has matinees as well as evening performances) they must wait until after the races . . . If you have a greyhound to dinner you should give him raw hamburger, ground coarsely but with all the fat removed, pearl barley, spinch, tomatoes, oatmeal, dog biscuit and hominy grits . . . You mix all this together and, if it is a very special occasion, you add a few spoonsful of cod liver oil . . . The ordinary portion weighs a pound and a quarter, although some owners dish out rations as heavy as two pounds . . . The average daily cost for a dog's board is 25 cents.

Sixty to sixty-four pounds is the ideal racing weight for a dog, but there have been winners all the way from forty-seven to seventy-four . . . At the start of the season the weight of each dog is recorded . . . When competing in a race his weight must not vary by more than two pounds from these recorded figures . . . Similarly only a pound and a half weight variation is permitted from his last weight.

This is to prevent cheating . . . There was a day (it still exists in too many places, as most dog racing experts will admit) when unscrupulous owners would fill their favorites full of food or water before a race.

Other owners used to celebrate "Be Kind to Animals Week" by sand-papering the pads of a popular dog's feet. It was a very fine means of winning bets on long shots, as you will discover if you try the trick on your own tootsies and then attempt to sprint a hundred.

Owen P. Smith invented the mechanical rabbit whereby dog racing was made possible as a public (and big betting) spectacle . . . That was in 1920 and the first events were held at Emeryville, Calif. . . . The biggest of all betting nights was at Springdale, Ohio, an outlaw track near Cincinnati. More than $325,000 was wagered.

Incidentally, owners flatly deny the widespread story that a greyhound which has caught the rabbit no longer is any good for racing and, in fact, is practically broken-hearted at the deception that has been practiced upon him.

Recalling When Johnson Kayoed Stanley Ketchell

Not in the box score:

Take it or leave it, but there are people who insist that Pete Bostwick, the millionaire steeplechase rider, wants to buy Brooklyn's Dodgers . . . Francis Albertani, recently retired Madison Square Garden pugilistic publicist, once was a world's champion. He won the title in a typewriting speed contest at the old Garden thirty-five years ago . . . After Jack Johnson knocked out Stanley Ketchell, two of Ketchell's teeth were found imbedded in Johnson's glove . . . Guy Sturdy, manager of the Baltimore Orioles, is one of the most accomplished of the baseball men now hunting and fishing in Florida. He lives in Kissimmee.

Even the ultra-careful New Jockey club sometimes makes takes. Recently a two-year-old registered as Sophia Tucker w it should have been Sophie. Similarly another thoroughbred was officially set down as Ruby Keller when the owner meant the name to be Keeler . . . Jorge Bresca, the heavyweight; Louis Soresi, his manager, and Billy DeFoe, his trainer, all were born in the same month, March.

Washington may get a franchise in the Eastern Amateur Hockey league next season. One of the big-time clubs is planning to operate a farm there.

Christ Is Risen

RING out the bells, beloved, the joyous Easter bells,
Celestial harmony along their cadence rolls and swells,
The blessed Christ is risen in the hearts that throb and thrill
Responsive to Love's law wherein we may all laws fulfill.

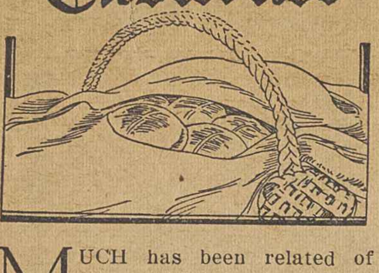
Merry Old England at Eastertide



MUCH has been related of the spiritual observances of merry old England at the Eastertide, and too little told of the culinary achievements that tickled the palates of peasants and courtiers alike on that great feast day, writes Marion Butler in the Chicago Tribune.

Not only were these Easter dishes intriguing in appearance and taste, but they were made doubly fascinating by folk ceremonies that attended them.

Nearly every day of the old English Easter week had its own special dish and unusual practices to go along with it. Tuesday was, and still is in some sections, known as "Pancake day." Although the term "Shrove" was originally derived from the Anglo-Saxon "scrifan," meaning to levy a penance, the English epicures evidently invented a most delightful way of paying up, for on this day it became traditional for every family to bake thick, mealy pancakes, flavored with sherry, and serve them sizzling hot for breakfast.

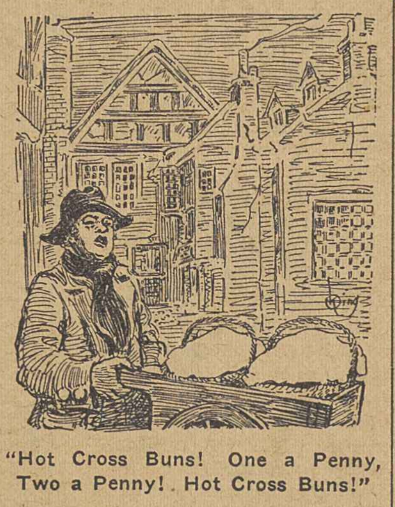
Maundy Thursday was the day on which the kings of England used to distribute baskets of food, known as "maunds," to the poor. These were especially coveted for the fine, white bread that they contained, loaves such as those being rare delicacies of that time. James II was the last sovereign to perform this ancient ceremony with all the elaborate church rites that attended it.

Good Friday fairly abounds in curious legends and customs connected with hot cross buns. In the early hours of Good Friday morning, Englishmen used to be abruptly torn from their pleasant slumbers by the great hue and cry of the bun vendors, who paraded the twisting, narrow streets of the towns, pushing their unwieldy bun carts before them, and chanting from dawn to dusk the familiar, old refrain: "Hot cross buns! One a penny, two a penny! Hot cross buns!"

Since modern warming contrivances were unknown in those days, these vendors had a difficult time keeping their wares hot. They carried them in large wicker baskets, such as we still use on wash days here. The buns were placed in layers of flannels to keep them warm, and then covered over with an outer cloth of white or green. It is related that the bun vendors of old were also extremely cautious in the manner in which they handed out the buns to customers, permitting only one hand to slide gingerly beneath the covers in drawing out their wares, thus allowing only the smallest possible breath of air to penetrate inside.

The hot cross buns of yesteryears were much more crisp and crunchy than our softer modern ones. They also were more highly flavored with spices, and had a sticky coating of brown sugar. So favorite a dainty did these pastries become with the English, that more than two hundred years ago in Chelsea two royal bun houses sprang up, waging the bitterest of "bun feuds" over the all-important question of which baked the best buns.

Each contended that the English kings and queens, themselves, patronized its house. One took the name of Chelsea Bun House, and the other that of the Real Old Original Chelsea Bun House. Popular taste seemed to shift, at intervals, from one to the other.



"Hot Cross Buns! One a Penny, Two a Penny! Hot Cross Buns!"

Both occupied large, frame buildings with covered counters, stretching along their fronts. People used to travel miles on foot and horseback, getting up at the first flush of dawn on Good Friday morning, to eat fresh hot cross buns there, or to buy them in square, black boxes to take back home.

Although the Christian sign of the cross has been imprinted upon these hot cross buns for many centuries now, they were really products of pre-Christian times! Egyptian priests used to sell buns in front of their temples, compiling small fortunes from these strange "admission tickets."

In primitive England, pagan tribes rudely mixed ceremonial buns of coarse grain and water as an offering to the coming of the spring sun, an event which they celebrated at wild festivals. With the coming of Christianity, the clergy waged warfare against this pagan practice, but met with such scant success that they evidently decided to make the best of a bad bargain by converting the buns into Christian symbols through the holy mark of the cross.

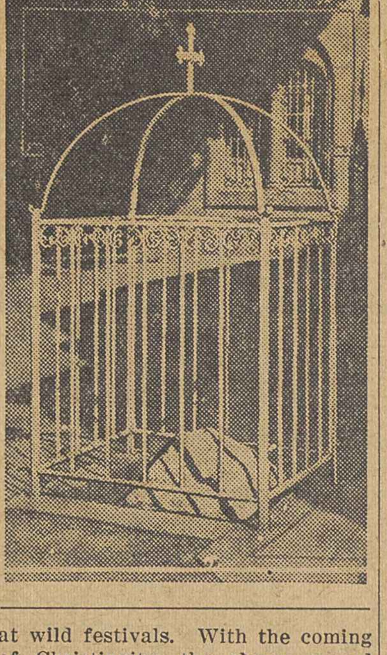
Another strange kind of bread, baked by old English cooks on Good Friday, was a loaf of very hard biscuit dough, having the sign of the cross perforated in it. The peasants carefully hung these loaves from their cottage roofs, leaving them there until Good Friday morning of the following year as special talismans to protect their homes from fire. In the dark, superstitious days prior to modern medicine, to these curious loaves were attributed the healing powers of the family doctor of modern times.

Whenever an illness fell upon them, these devout peasants of long ago would dissolve small bits of the bread in water, and drink it with as much faith in its curative qualities as we would have in the scientifically prescribed medicine or tonic of today!

EGGS AT EASTER

THE use of eggs at Easter time follows a custom of greatest antiquity, the egg having been considered in widely separated pre-Christian mythologies as the symbol of resurrection. It is probable that the Christian church adopted and consecrated an earlier custom. The egg is generally regarded as the symbol of spring, life and fecundity of nature.

Stone from Which Christ Ascended Into Heaven



Origin of Easter Bonnet

The Easter bonnet originated in the popular superstition that to wear a new bonnet for the first time on Easter Sunday was to be assured happiness in love during the year.

DARKNESS OF CRUCIFIXION

THE "darkness over all the earth" at the time of the crucifixion could not have been caused by an eclipse of the sun, for the reason that it occurred just after the passover, at the time of full moon, and an eclipse can only occur when the moon is between us and the sun, or at the time called "the dark of the moon."

Lloyd George, who ran the big war for England and won with the help of old Clemenceau, not sympathetic with France this time, says England is dangerously involved and "we shall send our young men to die, this time on German soil, to punish those arrogant and aggressive Teutons for daring to make preparations for the defense of their own soil against a foreign invader."

Arthur Brisbane

Lloyd George is bitter in his denunciation of the suggestion that England be dragged into another war. "France," says he, "can spend $500,000,000 on the erection of huge fortifications. We can vote plans which involve expenditure of an extra fifteen hundred million dollars for protection. But if the Germans propose to throw up even a pillbox to guard their famous cities and their greatest industrial area . . . then 'measures must be concerted' between the general army staffs of Britain and France."

The "fastest" double star is found, and that is the big news. "Twin suns" close together, in the constellation of Ophiuchus, revolve completely around each other in twenty months. The shortest period of revolution for any other "binary" star is five years. Some revolve only once in a hundred years.

Nature is both fast and slow; the electron in the atom revolves around the proton thousands of milions of times in a second. The lens-shaped Milky Way above your head, in which our sun is one of thirty thousand million specks of light, revolves once in 225,000,000 years. No limit to bigness, no limit to smallness, apparently.

That naval conference in London ends, quite to the satisfaction of England, with the situation about as it was when Hiram Johnson of California put the situation in these few words:

"Great Britain builds as she prefers; the United States builds as Great Britain permits."

England actually says to the United States, "You must build no more cruisers with eight-inch guns; we do not like them." And the United States humbly says, "All right, then we shall not build any."

It is the old story: England has statesmen, we have politicians—and some of them are Anglomaniac snobs.

Big business, like little business, has had its trouble, but here and there it is still big business. In his annual report for General Motors, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., reports net sales last year amounting to $1,155,641,511, against $862,672,670 the year before; a gain of more than two hundred and ninety-two million dollars. That means many new cars, and families made happier. The company paid out in wages more than three hundred and twenty-three million dollars, not including wages paid indirectly to thousands of workers producing materials of which automobiles are made.

Sixty of Mussolini's planes have wiped out Harar, Ethiopia's second biggest city, one of 40,000 inhabitants. "Civilized" Europe, England leading, bemoans the fact that a Mohammedan mosque, the Coptic cathedral and a Catholic church were blasted.

They forget what happened in the big war, at Rheims, Louvain and elsewhere, and the German cannon "Big Bertha" throwing at Paris shells that might well have wrecked Notre Dame, the Madeleine or the Sainte Chapelle.

War is as ruthless as was nature in the earthquake that destroyed the great cathedral of Lisbon.

When Pittsburgh is through with the disaster that has almost overwhelmed the city, a monument should be erected in a park, or on the mountainside, in honor of the courage and recuperative energy of the great industrial city. With lights turned off, water flooding the streets, many men and women calmly continued their work, wearing coal miners' light-bearing caps, like so many gigantic glow worms. Americans still possess resourcefulness and can do what they must do.

"To him that hath shall be given," even in Wall street speculation.

Beginning May 1, if you buy $100 worth of stocks, you must put $55 of your own into the deal. This will compel small fish to operate on a small scale and get rich slowly, if at all.

Seed Worry Over Outlook for Corn

Damage From Freezing Still in Doubt; Chinch Bug Threat Seen.

Supplied by the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Threats of a serious seed corn situation, brought on by record freezes, dominate the outlook situation for corn as farmers look forward to the planting season.

Earlier in the season, before the record winter had taken its toll in seed, a slightly increased acreage of corn was in prospect for the country, given normal weather conditions in the spring. How much the seed corn situation in some states will alter this prospect is not known.

Likewise the full extent of the chinch bug threat cannot be measured until a more accurate checkup can be made of what the record winter has done to these pests.

One of the relatively new outlets for corn as farmers plan their 1936 acreages is the distilled spirits industry, which used more than 19,000,000 bushels, or about four fifths of 1 per cent of the crop, in 1934-35 and promises some additional, although not large, increase in 1936.

This year's corn crop will follow a domestic harvest of 2,211,000,000 bushels in 1935, which was about 86 per cent of the 1928-32 average. The increase of 834,000,000 over 1934 production was partly the result of an increase but more so of better acre yields.

Last year Illinois increased its corn acreage over that in 1934 by about ½ per cent, but the 1935 acreage was still 17 per cent less than the 1928-32 average. The 1935 production of corn in Illinois was 137,000,000 bushels more than the low harvest of 1934, but more than 45,000,000 bushels less than the 1928-32 five-year average.

Weighing heavily in advance plans for the year's corn crop is the fact that feed supplies and the number of farm animals are now in the best balance in several years. With no more live stock than there are now and with normal yields from an acreage of corn as large as last year's, there might easily be a surplus of corn and the danger of low prices.

Plans for this year's corn crop are affected somewhat by the fact that although the quality of the 1935 harvest was generally good, the crop was poor in some sections of the country. Soft corn must necessarily be utilized for feed or otherwise consumed before warm spring weather. Furthermore it must be fed more liberally than sound corn to produce the same result.

Bindweed is an actual or potentially serious pest in all parts of the United States. This weed is distributed over many sections of farm land in the Mid-West and may be started at any remote point through planting contaminated seed.

Very little information is available as to the actual effect of bindweed on the yield of grain crops, states a writer in Successful Farming. Many farmers contend that on well-tilled fields bindweed does not reduce the yield of small grain. In order to secure some accurate information on this question, members of the department of agronomy of the Kansas State college visited farms infested with bindweed and harvested wheat and oats from bindweed areas and from adjacent areas in the same field that were free from bindweed.

The average yield of wheat in the bindweed areas was 13.8 bushels per acre, which was 7.1 bushels or 34 per cent less than the average yield of 20.9 bushels secured from the adjacent bindweed-free areas. The average oats yield in the bindweed areas was 16.6 bushels, which was 14.3 bushels or 46 per cent less than the average yield of 30.9 bushels secured in the bindweed-free areas.

Bindweed did not reduce the stand of either wheat or oats but it did reduce the stooling as indicated by head counts made at the time of harvesting.

Ohio farmers spent more than $4,000,000 for fertilizer in 1935.

Wisconsin's average tobacco crop is utilized as follows: 16 per cent for cigar binder and filler, and 84 per cent for scrap and other uses.

Further progress is expected this season in reducing the lead arsenate spray residue on apples and pears.

Cholera may affect the bowels, lungs, skin or blood of hogs. Frequently all of these parts are involved in one attack.

Late plowing is often unsatisfactory because the growth of plants has already removed so much water from the soil that the planted crop does not have a sufficient supply.

Writes Interestingly of His Service In Uncle Sam's Navy

The following interesting letter from Herbert Reynolds, of the United States Fleet, Aircraft Battle Force, aboard the U. S. S. Ranger, is given us for publication by Mrs. F. W. Rogan.

Herbert is a son of Dr. F. K. Reynolds, of Birmingham, who is a brother of Mrs. Rogan.

The letter was written to Dr. and Mrs. Reynolds.

Division K, Radio, U.S.S. Ranger,
San Deigo, California.

Dear Daddy and Mother:

Your letter came today. It was good to get it. There seems to be a good bit more time between letters since I have been aboard ship.

I am glad to know where Orville is stationed. The next time I stand a watch in radio central I'll look up the Dupont in the movement report files and see where she is and where she's headed for. In this file we have itineraries of all naval vessels. From reports by radio we keep record and positions of all ships in commission. Not all ships do this—only those of the flag rating—those which carry an Admiral or of the "type" commander variety.

You said in the letter trat you had no idea that a steamer made thirty miles an hour. A steamer doesn't, unless you consider a naval vessel as a steamer. Usually about the seaports steamers are considered passenger carrying vessels. When you realize that engines developing well over 100,000 and very nearly 200,000 horsepower are driving these ships it is small wonder that they are capable of such a speed. Most steamers have about 10,000 to 15,000 horsepower and average about twelve or thirteen knots per hour. The passenger ships don't require all the extra power to push the heavy armor and guns about with them.

The Ranger is the smallest of the aircraft carriers excluding the Langley. The Lexington and Saratoga are a set of twins or sister ships, the only difference being that one has a stripe horizontally around the stacks and the other having a vertical stripe on the stacks. These two ships "draw" so very much water that they do not anchor within the harbor long enough for the tide to recede. They anchor about seven miles out at sea and liberty parties and supplies are carried to and from the beach by way of liberty boats. They are nearly nine hundred feet in length and they displace 39,000 tons each. We maneuver with them in fleet problems. Just to show you how fast they are one almost invariably glances around the horizon before going below deck and usually sees nothing other than the two destroyers at our stern which tend aircraft that fall in the water. Upon coming back upon deck a few minutes later we occasionally find one of the sister ships cutting along at our side and when we next notice, they are away again.

There is nothing more deserted to my knowledge than the open sea. When you're out where the sky meets the sea all around it is absolutely desert, nothing absolutely but water everywhere. Generally the Pacific is calm and smooth as glass but when it does get rough it is a real demon and becomes very furious. There are usually twenty or twenty-five fins cutting the water behind the ship. Flying fish are very common and it is remarkable that they can fly for such a distance and at such a great speed. Until we reached the Pacific, there were no large fish to be seen. Incidentally, while I'm talking about it, did you know the eastern entrance of the Panama Canal is twenty-seven miles West of the Western entrance and the canal is due south of New York.

Destroyers are comparatively small ships. The largest of them is about 350 feet long and 36 feet wide. Unfortunately they cannot have the conveniences and accommodations which the large ships have, such as bakeries, machine shops, laundries, reading and writing rooms, libraries, woodwork shops, movies, recreation space, shower rooms, wash rooms, and many others too numerous to mention. During foul weather, the unfortunates aboard the "cans" as we call them, must resort to eating sandwiches and even then only when hanging on to something. I have noticed the two behind us in maneuver during rough sea that they almost completely submerge; you can imagine how they are tossed around. The ranger is so long that she merely runs right through the waves and wen ever feel more than just a little roll at times. She is much too long to "pitch." These destroyers that follow our ship are called "retrievers" because they retrieve any plane that might go over the side. We never stop to pick them up due to the fact that there must be twenty-five knots of wind across our bow before planes can land and take off. When there is no wind we must make our own by making twenty-five knots windward.

In the event a plane goes over the side the pilot is well protected by what is known as "floating gear." On either side of the plane, just below the wings is a very tough and large rubberized canvas bag concealed in the fuselage of the wing. Upon hitting the water, the pressure of the water operates a valve on a bottle of compressed carbon monoxide which inflates the bags thereby buoying the plane. Seaplanes are seldom used aboard carriers due to their inflexible qualities, nevertheless there are always several aboard for utility purposes.

The fleet normally would move toward a scene of battle in this manner: The battleships form the nucleus with the heavy cruisers and those classed as flying deck (aircraft carrying) cruisers, light cruisers in concentric circles about the nucleus. Just out side the ring of light cruisers are the two rings of destroyers which move in concentric circles as the whole formation moves forward. Outside the destroyers, are the submarines. Such a formation is a protection against mines and enemy submarines.

In actual conflict, the main function of the destroyer is to zig-zag into the enemy's lines and fire broadsides of torpedoes (for they only carry small anti-aircraft rifles) and then get out of the enemy lines by running at topmost speed—if they can. A squadron of destroyers attack a battleship (48) destroyers fire a broadside of torpedoes simultaneously. If all destroyers are sunk by the battlewagon's big deadly guns (which is considered probable) and the battleship is in turn sunk, the fleet operating the squadron of lost destroyers is considered to be winning. That will give you some idea of the importance and value of a battleship.

A destroyer is nothing more than a high powered ship covered with hardly more than protection from the sea (1-2 inch steel sides) and no armor plating.

The Washington conference limits the size of battleships now to a 35,000 ton limit and guns to not over 16 inches. All battleships carry a large fuel capacity and have a large cruising radius. All battleships are heavily armored in the vicinity of the vital points of the ship and on the waterline, gradually tapering off to about 3 inches at the bow and stern. In addition to this they carry heavy armor in the barbetts leading up to the gun turrets, heavy armor in the tubes leading up to the conning and fire control towers and heavy armor in wake of the uptake space of the smoke pipes. All turrets are heavily armored. A heavy protective deck of special steel covers the vitals of the ship. Besides this armor battleships are protected by having double bottoms split into numerous watertight subdivisions. Also all vital parts of the ship are divided into numerous watertight compartments so that these parts can be flooded without seriously affecting the other parts. In the latest ships, there are further subdivisions, called "blisters," for protection against torpedoes. Except for the tapering at the bow and stern, the armor around the waterline is about twenty-one inches. From this you see how a "battlewagon" can sound "clear deck for action" over the intership speaker system and wade right into the hottest, cutting loose with broadsides from submerged torpedo tubes and salvos from 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16 inch rifles without suffering much damage from the tempest. These battleships are of moderate speed, about 20 knots.

The aircraft carriers carry enough armor to protect them against a stray torpedo, but their light frames would not withstand the strain of heavy rifles. Their armament is not more than ten inch rifles and a great number of smaller anti-aircraft rifles. Due to the flexibility and great speed of the planes the aircraft carries steam along far behind the lines acting as "intelligence centers" and "nursing" the babies that carry 1,000 pound TNT "eggs."

Cruisers are lightly armored, carry moderate armament, and of high speed, about 34 knots. Naval treaties limit the size of cruisers to 10,000 tons displacement and to rifles not to exceed 8 inches. Ships with guns greater than 6 inches are known as heavy cruisers and those with 6 inches or less are known as light cruisers. All have an extremely large fuel capacity in order to maintain high speed for long periods. Cruisers, like battleships, are divided into numerous watertight compartments.

There are small vessels which serve as their names imply: minelayers, minesweepers, submarines, submarine chasers, eagleboats, gunboats, harbor and sea-going tugs.

Friday at three in the afternoon a message in code came through the circuit. We didn't think it was unusual because coded messages are always passing through the circuits and they are just a jumble of letters. This particular message was from the Commander in Chief of the fleet telling the entire fleet to get under way. No one had the slightest idea what it was about. The following morning we found ourselves just out of San Pedro with the rest of the fleet. The battleships stay around San Pedro and the cruisers, destroyers, mine vessels, submarines, aircraft carriers, and utility ships stay around San Deigo. Saturday night we anchored just out of San Deigo and learned that it was just another mystery move to test the flexibility and readiness of tne fleet.

During such maneuvers everything works like clockwork. Everyone does his part, and everyone has a part to do. Although our communication system was immediately flooded with tactical signals and priority messages, additional circuits and watches promptly cleared them. You probably know that the naval systems of communication are the most efficient and reliable. They are supervised and operated almost perfectly. It has been said that the next war will be fought with typewriters. That is the truth. It has also been said that "take the typewriters away from the United States Navy and they are then defeated" and that also is the truth.

Radio has been so developed within the navy in the last few years that it is used in practically every field. In a few seconds by our direction finders aboard can determine the position of a ship or station within several hundred miles radius. We can plot the course and position of an airplane by the same manner. We can direct a plane thru the fog in the darkest night to the ship in the same manner. My "battle station" is in DF3 (direction finder three). The system of naval communication is very elaborate, but it is by no means clumsy. If it becomes necessary (as it became necessary yesterday when circuits were needed to convey urgent tactical signals) the Commander in chief on the flag ship merely must send a message which means silence and immediately all ships and stations cease all transmission and listen on the commanding circuit and operate as directed. This is the directive circuit; it would take volumes to go into details.

Normally there are about 20,000 sailors making liberty in San Deigo. When the fleet is out San Deigo is a deserted city. The sailors own and operate San Deigo exclusively.

I forgot to mention that the sailors own and operate San Pedro also. All battleships make their liberties there. There are twelve battleships and an airstation there. Each battleship has between 1,500 and 2,000 men aboard. You can see that it is well in the hands of the sailors.

Tomorrow our ship leaves for sea again to execute long range anti-aircraft rifle drills. We shall probably be at sea for several weeks. All supplies (those that are needed—mail, etc.) are brought aboard by planes from land.

The Dupont is here in San Deigo I notice. The first opportunity I'm going to send Orville a radiogram and find out how he is getting along and how he likes the ship.

This is a pretty technical letter, but it ought to be interesting to someone anyhow. That is about all I can write of in such a place as this.—Love, HERBERT.

Reduced Power Rates Ordered

THOMAS W. MARTIN SHOWS HOW NEW SCHEDULES WILL SAVECOSTS

Birmingham, March 30— Thomas W. Martin, president of Alabama Power Company, commenting on the order of the Alabama Public Service Commission requiring that all urban residential customers now be placed on the low "immediate" A-4 rate and be given the opportunity to qualify for the still lower "objective" rate, stated:

"In addition to the immediate saving of $60,000 annually to approximately 20,000 urban residential customers beginning April 1, the total savings under the new plan will ultimately aggregate $324,000 annually for all customers.

"Alabama Power Company willingly cooperates with the Commission in the continuance of the 'immediate-objective' rate plan theory first inaugurated by the Alabama Public Service Commission in August, 1933. The company's policy has always been to sell electric energy at the lowest possible price consistent with good business practice. Its ability, however, to sell electric energy to residential customers at progressively lower rates is largely dependent upon its ability to conduct its business economically. Unwise, prequdicial and punitive legislation against progressively-managed utility companies, such as Alabama Power Company, can in the long run only react to the ultimate consumer's disadvantage. Constantly increasing tax burdens can result only in hampering the company in its continuing desire to make possible increased use of electricity to customers of all income classes at rates which are already considered among the lowest in the nation.

While new rates ordered by the commission are such as to encourage a liberal widespread use of electric service, we know that such use will not develop without considerable effort on our part. So that the new rates will benefit the greatest possible number of customers, it is our plan to promote the widespread sale of electrical equipment for the home at reasonable prices and comfortable terms of payment, through intensive advertising, energetic effort by our own sales organization and by extending dealers in electrical merchandise assistance in the way of personnel sales training, so that they too may benefit from the rate schedule through increased sales of electrical merchandise.

"In reviewing the steady decline of electric rates in Alabama over a 20-year period, it is interesting to observe that under the new objective rate which will be available for urban residential customers on May 1, the customer using 20 kilowatt hours per month has enjoyed reductions aggregating 54 per cent and the customer using 100 kilowatt hours per month will pay 66 per cent less than he would have paid 20 years ago. The customer who uses electricity for lighting, cooking, refrigeration, water heating, radio and other incidental purposes will be paying 80 per cent less than he would have had to pay 20 years ago.

"That electric rates have been low in Alabama for some years is seen in the large average annual use of electricity in Alabama homes. The average annual use passed 1,000 kilowatt hours in January of this year. Such a record has been attained by only one other utility east of the Rocky Mountains. This average use was exceeded in 1935 in 61 Alabama communities, whose annual use per domestic customer ranged from 1,006 to 3,223 kilowatt hours annually."

Game Development Urged By Duncan

WILDLIFE IS ADVANTAGE TO FARMERS IN CONTROL OF INSECT PESTS

Game management has real possibilities from an agricultural standpoint and the farmers of Alabama would be wise to lend it their support and encouragement, decilares Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute in the April issue of the Alabama Game and Fish News.

Dr. Duncan said the new $470,000,000 soil conservation program and the organization of county conservation councils throughout Alabama offer farmers of the state an unusual opportunity to enrich farm life through game development and restoration.

"Under the new farm program farmers will be encouraged to and in the cases of some crops paid for growing soil-improving and soil conserving crops, such as soybeans, cowpeas, field beans, and other legumes, wheat, oats, rys, barley, and other small grains, all kinds of grasses and forest trees—all of which are ideal for encouraging wildlife growth," he said.

"These crops not only provide cover for birds and other wildlife but they supply a large quantity of foods for game to eat. Farmers also can greatly improve the conditions for birds and small animals by providing rows of berry patches, plum thickets, or honeysuckle tangles near the fields to furnish hiding and nesting places.

"It becomes increasingly apparent that there is a place for wildlife in general agricultural practices, although it is seldom possible for the average farmer to handle anything but small game.

"However, cover, food and water are three things that any game, bird or animal, must have if it is to survive and propagate. There must be shelter and cover and this must be suitable for nesting protection from the elements and provide effective means of escape from natural enemies.

"Food must be made available the year round and the cover and food must be close enough together for them to be utilized by the game. Water, of course, is equally as important as food and cover. Game management has real possibilities from an agricultural standpoint and the farmers of Alabama would be wise to lend it their support and encouragement.

"The movement to organize conservation councils in the state offers farmers, sportsmen and hunters a splendid opportunity to cooperate in conserving wildlife. It is my desire that the farmers join wholeheartedly in this movement.

The W. M. U. prepared and served a delicious bansuet. Toasts were given to the state workers, old council, new council and to the seniors. An alarm clock proved to be the source of much amusement because it told who would perform clever stunts. Miss Barbara Nettles was hostess at the banquet.

More New Deal Funds for Alabama

FORTY MILLIONS MORE TO COME FROM UNCLE SAM THIS YEAR

Federal recovery agencies will pour $40,000,000 of additional funds into Alabama during the rest of this year to sustain business and employment, John D. Petree, state director of the National Emergency Council, declared at a statewide meeting of these agencies in Birmingham Monday.

State heads of 25 "alphabetical" agenciesa ttended the meeting at the Thomas Jefferson Hotel.

All federal agencies have spent a total of $306,000,000 in Alabama since the Roosevelt recovery program got under way in May, 1933, Director Petree declared.

H. S. Geismer, PWA director in Alabama, said that within 30 to 90 days his agency will start projects costing $14,750,000 and employing 5,000 men in addition to the 2,000 working on PWA projects already launched.

A. J. Speer, state director of the National Reemployment Service, stated that his agency has placed 35,807 persons in private employment since May, 1933.

Julian Brown, state director of rural rehabilitation, said his agency is aiding 13,446 destitute or low-income farm families and that the number will increase to 14,000 shortly. Tenants comprise 65 per cent of Alabama's farm population, he said.

Roy L. Thompson, representing the Farm Credit Administration, stated that loans of his agency in Alabama fell from $11,000,000 in 1934 to $1,750,000 in 1935, indicating the rise in farm prosperity.

Hugh White, State Public Service Commission chairman, speaking at the luncheon of the group, stated that income of all Alabama utilities is only about four per cent less than in the boom year of 1929.

Examples of handicraft, manual arts and fine arts developed in camps of the Civilian Conservation Corps in Alabama were displayed along with photographs and charts describing activities of other federal agencies.

Ray Crow, state WPA director, was to outline work of this federal agency during the past three months, showing how the number of WPA employes has declined from 48,000 to 38,000.

Speakers on the program in Birmingham were Thad Holt, national assistant WPA administrator, on "Relief Aspects of the National Works Program;" Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of Auburn, "The Farm Program in Alabama;" Roy L. Thompson, of New Orleans, representing the Farm Credit Administration; J. E. Bryan, state director of the National Youth Administration; Dr. A. H. Collins, director of the State department of public welfare.

Dr. and Mrs. J. I. Reid visited Mrs. Reid's father, Mr. Gilbert, in Warrior Friday night.

Mr. Frank Kroell of Mobile, Mr. John Kroell of Alabaster and Mr. and Mrs. Ben Wood of Troy spent the Easter holidays with their aunts, Mrs. Mary Creah and Miss Kate Kroell.

The Three Life Attitudes" will be the pastor's theme at the Sunday morning service. What is your attitude toward life? Toward the world? At the Sunday evening service the pastor will give a stereopticon lecture on Palestine, using a new set of slides made from photographs, also a few art pictures on the life of Christ.

Dr. Pearson will give the illustrated lecture on Palestine at the Russell Mills Baptist Church in Alexander City on Thursday evening of this week. On Friday evening he will give it at the Eastern District B. T. U. Convention at Phenix City. He has some engagements to give the lecture at other places in the near future also.

Don't forget Sunday School at 9:45 a.m. Sunday morning. The Baptist Training Union will meet at 6:45 Sunday evening.

Red Cross Asks $300 From Shelby County

The National Red Cross has asked Shelby County for an additional quota of $300 for the relief of the stricken areas in the Carolinas, Georgia, Mississippi, and Alabama. Up to the present time the collections have fallen far short of the first quota which was $375. Our collection to date has been $139.45. The need is urgent. Any contribution mailed to Mr. J. R. White in Columbiana or to Dr. F. B. Pearson in Montevallo will be forwarded through the Red Cross Chapter to National headquarters in Washington from where it will be distributed to the stricken families.

Easter Egg Hunt Is Enjoyed

The primary department of the Baptist Sunday school was entertained by Mrs. Roy Hicks Sunday afternoon with an Easter Egg Hunt at the little Springs. Dudley D. Pendleton was awarded the prize for finding the most eggs. The Golden Egg was found by Allen Prude Fancher. After the hunt many games and contests were enjoyed by the children. Later in the afternoon cookies and candy Easter Eggs were served to the following: Pep Jeter, E. G. Smitherman, Allen Prude Fancher, Dudley D., Betty and Billy Pendleton, Roy and Grady Hicks, Maxine Vincent, Charles A and Walter Marvin Blankenship, Martha Mahan, Helen Hammett, Bliss and Leon Nix, Harry Horn, Jessie Mathews, Oliva Bridges. Assisting in entertaining were Misses Idellar Baker, Ressie Mae Woolley, Mrs. Harry Horn and Miss Marjorie Langston.

Oliver Is Lauded By Bankhead

Washington.—Representative W. B. Oliver of the Sixth District of Alabama, a member of congress for 11 consecutive terms and one of the real veterans of the house of representatives, will not be a candidate for reelection this fall, it was announced on the floor of the house last week by Representative Will Bankhead, who paid a tribute to the Tuscaloosa legislator.

During a discussion of the appropriation bill for these four departments last week in the house, Representative Bankhead said of Oliver:

"It has been a matter of deep grief and regret to all of us that on account of a temporary indisposition he has been compelled to forego his duties here in the congress of the United States. He will not be a candidate for reelection to the house, and I am sure that my distinguished absent colleague will carry away from this body the universal love and respect and admiration of every member on both sides of the aisle with whom he has served in the past. (Applause).

It will be very comforting and heartening to him, in the period of his illness to have had this manifestation which you have just given of the genuine love and respect in which he is held by the entire membership of this body, and your recognition of the great service he has rendered to the congress and the country during the 26 years of distinguished service in this body."

Mr. L. S. Dickey spent the week end with his mother in Ohatchee.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Day and Mrs. Courtney Carter of Selma were guests of Mr. and Mrs. M. P. Jeter last week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Simpson and Mrs. F. W. Rogan spent Monday in Birmingham.

More than two million cars on the road have proved the reliability and economy of the V-type engine—as used in the 1936 Ford V-8. Besides, it gives flashing acceleration and tremendous power. The V-type 8-cylinder engine is an important reason why the Ford is in a class by itself in value, performance and satisfaction.

Employment Gains In State Reported

GOVERNMENT HAS POURED EIGHTY-FIVE MILLIONS INTO ALABAMA

Public relief Monday was the lone discordant note in a symphony of improved business conditions, increased employment and higher wages sounded at a meeting in Birmingham of representatives of President Roosevelt's New Deal emergency agencies.

Starting with a report to be made by Ray Crowe, WPA administrator for Alabama, disclosing that the government has poured $85,619,751 in federal funds into the state in three and a fourth years, the reports included a heartening summary of better conditions emphasizing a decrease in distressed properties, and a new figure in employment and wage levels.

A. H. Collins, commissioner, state department of public welfare, told the meeting, shortly before adjournment for luncheon, that nothing but quick action will save thousands in Alabama from actual starvation, and characterized the proposed use of $250,000 in reconstruction bond funds as nothing more than a "stop-gap" until a permanent program can be devised to care for the starving and disease ridden.

One of the highlights of the meeting, attended by representatives of emergency and permanent agencies from over the state on instructions of the president to summarize accomplishments during his administration, was a report to be read during the afternoon session from Robert R. Moore, state commissioner of labor, showing:

First, the highest level of employment, using December, 1931, as 100 per cent, since that time, with an index of 111.7, and an increase in average wages during the same period from $13.41 to an even $16.

Mr. Moore's report, based on figures from the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, disclosed that wages in Alabama reached an alltime low of $9.73 in March, 1933, and have continued upward with $13.47 in March, 1933, and have continued upward with $13.47 in March 1934; $15.43 in March, 1935, and reached the $16 peak last December.

Using December, 1931, as a basis for 100 per cent the wage index last December stood at 128.9.

"It is the temporary unemployment caused by labor saving inventions that is stamped upon the minds of workers who have been laid off their jobs," Mr. Moore's report declares.

"Unemployment compensation laws should be the cure for this fear in the breast of every worker who, through progressive evolution, loses his job. Along with this march of progress and technological unemployment, another step must be insisted upon to help unemployment compensation solve the problem, and that is the complete elimination of child labor."

Men's Bible Class

The Men's Bible Class of Montevallo will meet on Sunday morning at 10 o'clock sharp in the Strand Theatre. Mr. Luther E. Shaw, president, will preside. Professor A. C. Anderson of Alabama College announces that he will speak on "Our Race Problem."

Last Sunday a most interesting discussion on Punishing the Criminal" was enjoyed by the class, being lead by Dr. Lee M. Brooks. The peak of attendance of 30 men was recorded.

The class is increasing in momentum of interest and numbers. A most interesting meeting this Sunday is assured. Come and bring a friend.

M. E. Church Circle Meeting

Circle No. 1 of the Methodist Missionary Society met Monday afternoon at Mrs. J. H. Henning's with Mrs. John Gilbert as co-hostess. Mrs. L. C. Parnell had charge of the meeting. The program was led by Mrs. R. P. Holcomb. Mrs. Floyd W Lacey conducted the devotional session. She was assisted by Mrs. Holcomb. The subject of the program was "A People's House." Mrs. E. E. Craig gave an intersting discussion of that subject. During the business session plans for the district conference were made. The circle project for the year was decided on. It will consist of fixing up the pastor's study. The past month the circle bought and gave a chair toward the project. Mrs. C. C. Underwood was welcomed in the society as a new member. The following members were present: Mesdames C. C. Underwood, L. C. Parnell, Floyd W. Lacey, R. P. Holcomb, M. L. Orr, O. B. Cooper, T. H. Napier, John Gilbert, J. H. Henning, Bill Carpenter, Joe Doyle, and E. E. Craig.

Congressmen Hurrying With Tax and Relief Programs—Black's Committee Wins a Decision—Distracting Rivalries in European Diplomacy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

Harry L. Hopkins

CONGRESS settled down to earnest work that would clear the way for early adjournment, the two chief matters under consideration being taxes and relief. Democratic members of the house ways and means committee worked in executive session to draw up the new revenue measure which they expect will yield about $799,000,000 in additional taxes during the next year. The minority members stayed away, scornfully asserting their presence was useless because the preparation of the measure was utterly partisan. Representative A. P. Lamneck of Ohio, Democrat, was insistent on his plan to raise $500,000,00 by a flat 20 to 22 per cent tax on corporation income. To produce $263,000,000 more and bring his plan nearly up to the money requirement outlined by President Roosevelt, Lamneck would repeal the present exemption of corporation dividends from the normal income tax rate. On that, he was in agreement with the committee program.

Harry L. Hopkins, head of the WPA, appeared before a subcommittee of the house appropriations committee, also in executive session, to urge compliance with President Roosevelt's request for an additional billion and a half to finance relief in the 1937 fiscal year. Various committee members at once demanded that Mr. Hopkins tell what had been done with the $4,800,000,000 granted last year. He was said to have promised to do his best to satisfy them, but Chairman J. P. Buchanan warned the minority members that "this is not to be made into an investigation."

SENATOR NORRIS' bill creating a Mississippi Valley authority to apply the TVA experiment to 22 states is not approved by the National Grange, which thinks it would be absurd to bring new land into cultivation by irrigation while farmers are being paid for letting their land lie fallow. Fred H. Brenckman, legislative representative of the Grange, appeared before a senate agriculture subcommittee and said the organization also objected to the proposal to construct huge dams throughout the Mississippi valley for the production of hydro-electric power. He favored a scientific program of soil conservation but insisted upon a distinction between conservation and reclamation. He also advocated a scientific flood control program, but distinguished between flood control and hydro-electric power development.

Like previous witnesses, including electrical engineers and Morris L. Cooke, the New Deal's rural electrification administrator, Mr. Brenckman informed the committee that flood control can be accomplished only by constructing little dams far up in the headwaters.

Senator Black

SENATOR BLACK'S lobby committee won a considerable victory in the District of Columbia Supreme court when Chief Justice Wheat refused to enjoin the committee from using the telegrams from and to William R. Hearst which had been seized. The judge held that the court had no jurisdiction over the committee, and said he could not see that the freedom of the press was in any way involved. Said his honor:

"I have not been informed yet of any case in which any court has assumed to dictate to a committee of the senate what it should do and what it should not do, and I do not feel that I have any right to inaugurate any such principle as that."

Elisha Hanson, counsel for Mr. Hearst, announced that he would appeal from the decision, and it was certain that the case would ultimately be taken before the United States Supreme court.

Continuing its investigation, the Black committee heard the testimony of Fred G. Clark of New York, national commander of the Crusaders. Mr. Clark denied that the organization had ever engaged in lobbying, and declared that it had assailed the methods of lobbyists in a national radio broadcast.

Senator Black endeavored to show that the Crusaders, the American Liberty league, the Sentinels of the Republic, the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution, the American Taxpayers' league, the National Economy league, and similar organizations opposed to the New Deal were supported largely by the same small group of wealthy industrialists. One of his investigators put in a list of contributors to two or more of the groups named. Mr. Clark obtained permission to include in the record a list of hundreds of small contributors, who sent in sums ranging from $1 up in response to the radio program.

FLYING through a fog on its way to Pittsburgh, a Transcontinental and Western Air liner went far out of its course, plowed through the forest seven miles southeast of Union City, Pa., and smashed into a granite wall on Chestnut Ridge. Nine passengers and the two pilots were killed. The stewardess, Miss Nellie Granger, managed to drag one man and the sole woman passenger from the flaming wreckage, bound up their wounds, ran four miles to a farmhouse from which she telephoned to Pittsburgh the news of the disaster, and then returned to the scene to care for the survivors until a rescue party could arrive. The pilots were flying on a radio beam, and it was believed their radio apparatus failed. At this writing there is no other explanation for the crash.

Sen. Wagner

FEDERAL money totaling $976,000,000 will be spent in the next four years on low-cost rent and slum clearance construction projects, provided the administration's housing bill, introduced by Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, is passed by congress. Mr. Wagner hopes it will be put through during the present session.

The measure is a compromise of the many proposals made by the various relief and housing agencies of the New Deal and was drafted after a series of conferences with President Roosevelt. It would create another bureau, with five directors, including the secretary of the interior in his ex officio capacity, receiving $10,000 salaries. The authority could employ officers, agents, counsel and other personnel without limitation as to number or compensation and without regard for the civil service laws. This authority would supplant the existing housing division of the Public Works administration.

The authority would be empowered to make grants not to exceed 45 per cent of the total cost and loans for the remainder to any public housing agency for the acquisition of land and the construction of "low-rent" housing projects. The loans would be repayable over a period not to exceed 60 years. at such rates of interest as the authority decreed. In addition to the loans and grants, the authority could develop and administer so-called demonstration projects, which "as soon as practicable" would be sold to public housing agencies.

MUSSOLINI'S African adventure and Hitler's Rhineland doings and future intentions, tangled together, have created a situation that seemed to imperil the formal friendship between Great Britain and France. The British were insisting that Italy be curbed, that her use of poison gas in Ethiopia be taken up by the League of Nations and that peace negotiations between Italy and Ethiopia be opened quickly to forestall any attempt by Premier Mussolini to sign a settlement which might rise from ruins of Haile Selassie's Ethiopian empire. Foreign Secretary Eden indicated the British were determined to make peace progress "before we leave Geneva," Britain reserving its decision as to what to do next if this conciliation effort failed.

The conciliation committee of the league was making little or no progress, and in Rome Mussolini told his cabinet that Ethiopia's armies should and would be "totally annihilated." His own forces, meanwhile, were moving rapidly toward Dessye and Addis Ababa.

France was reverting to her former policy of letting Italy go ahead with its African conquest, devoting her attention mainly to Germany and central Europe. The British continued to treat all that in a conciliatory way, which disgusted the French. Premier Sarraut handed in his government's reply to the Hitler settlement proposals, submitting in return its own plan. This demanded that Germany keep "hands off" the rest of Europe for 25 years, renouncing her apparent intentions of action against Austria, Danzig and Memel, and claims for colonies. It submitted a French peace plan based on "collective security" with regional mutual assistance pacts backed by an international army directed by a commission working through the league.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, happy and well tanned, wound up his fishing cruise in the Bahamas and returned to Washington. He landed at Fort Lauderdale and boarded his special train at once, being accompanied for a time by Governor Sholtz of Florida and James A. Moffett who may be appointed assistant secretary of the navy to succeed the late Henry Roosevelt. Governor McNutt of Indiana, possible keynoter of the Democratic convention, went up from Miami to greet the President.

On the way to Washington Mr. Roosevelt stopped for half a day at Warm Springs, Ga., to look at his farm and take a swim in the resort pool. Passing through part of the region devastated by the recent tornadoes, he received reports from eyewitnesses along the route.

Judge Ritter

RESOLVING itself into a court, the senate began the impeachment trial of Federal Judge Halsted L. Ritter of Florida—the twelfth such case in 137 years. It was believed the trial would last at least one week. The defendant was represented by Carl T. Hoffman of Miami and Frank R. Walsh of Washington and New York. The prosecution was in charge of Representative Summers of Texas, Hobbs of Alabama and Perkins of New Jersey.

Originally approximately 60 witnesses were summoned for the trial, but 29 were excused because of withdrawal by the prosecution of two specifications in article seven charging Judge Ritter acted improperly in electric rate and banking proceedings.

Judge Ritter is charged in seven impeachment articles voted by the house with allowing A. L. Rankin, a former law partner, exorbitant receivership fees, with "corruptly" receiving $4,500 from Rankin, with violating the judicial code in practice of law while on the bench, and with evasion of taxes on part of his 1929 and 1930 incomes.

In a 12,000-word reply, Ritter denied all of the charges. He asserted none of the actions cited had "brought his court into scandal and disrepute" or "destroyed public confidence in the administration of justice" in that court.

SOMETHING new in Spanish history took place in Madrid. The parliament, by a vote of 238 to 5, ousted Niceto Alcala Zamora from the office of president of the republic. This action, accomplished by a coalition of Socialists, Communists, Left Republicans and ten minor groups, was taken on a Socialist motion that the president had acted illegally in dissolving the last parliament before the elections and that therefore he should be expelled from office. Back of this motion, however, lay radical sentiment that Zamora, in using his power according to personal whim, has hampered the progress of the "republican revolution."

Diego Martinez Barrio, speaker of parliament, was made temporary president to serve until elections are held.

FIVE hundred members of the Workers' Alliance, in convention in Washington, marched to the White House to demand continuation of the Works Progress administration, but neither President Roosevelt nor any of his secretaries was there to receive their petition. The men were orderly and the police did not molest them. WPA Administrator Hopkins also was absent from his office, but his assistant, Aubrey Williams, received the delegation.

David Lasser, national chairman of the organization, told Williams the group had been promised food and shelter during their stay in Washington and transportation to their homes.

Williams said that under a regulation promulgated February 2 no federal funds could be donated for conventions of the unemployed unless congress made a specific appropriation for that purpose.

TORNADOES tore across Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Arkansas, and Tennessee, leaving death and destruction in their wake. About 400 persons were killed and hundreds of others injured, and the property losses ran up into the millions. The little city of Tupelo, Miss., suffered the most, with nearly 200 on the death list and more than a hundred homes smashed into kindling wood.

A few hours later another tornado struck Gainesville, Ga., and in three minutes had nearly ruined the business section of the town and killed more than 150 persons. In fires that followed the storm the bodies of many victims were burned beyond recognition.

IN A decision concerning a specific action of the Securities Exchange commission the United States Supreme court ruled against the SEC, and in its pronouncement it uttered a significant warning against the exercise of arbitrary power by governmental agencies. Especially censured were the "fishing excursions," often undertaken by commissions and congressional committees.

Justices Cardozo, Stone and Brandeis dissented in part.

All Talk About Taxes

Washington.—In the last few weeks in Washington, we have heard little about any governmental affairs except taxes. Everyone charged with responsibility for maintenance of the supply of cash to carry on the era of spending is talking about taxes. It is in truth the predominant subject, overshadowing even the lobby investigation headed by Senator Black, Alabama Democrat, with that committee's record of obtaining private telegrams by subterfuge.

It really is not startling that everyone should be talking about taxes because, however you examine the question of government at this time, your analysis must inevitably lead back to the question of the source of funds. And how could it be otherwise? We have a national debt $5,000,000,000 larger than it has ever been before, and still going higher; we have seven or nine or eleven million people unemployed—depending on the source of your information on this point—and we are confronted with declarations from President Roosevelt and his advisers that more must be spent. It seems perfectly obvious, therefore, that saner minds should be examining the whole economic structure of the nation to determine from whence the money is to come.

Congress is in the midst of working out a new tax bill. The house of representatives, where revenue legislation must originate, according to the Constitution which is still operative, is up to its neck with the tax problem. It is trying to work out a tax bill that will carry out the White House orders to take more money from corporations by levies on surpluses along with some minor schemes of taxation designed to increase the total somewhat.

During the time the house ways and means committee was trying to formulate a tax program on the basis of the President's tax message, there was a perfect deluge of tax discussion hereabouts. I think it may be said in this connection, also, that the house ways and means committee did a rather ridiculous thing as a preliminary to presentation of a tax bill to the house. It actually began hearings on tax legislation without a tax bill in legislative language having been drafted. As far as I can learn, it was the first time that witnesses were called in and asked to testify as to the efficacy of proposed tax legislation when there was actually not language in legislative form about which those witnesses could testify, either for or against. All the committee had before it was a so-called "committee report," a statement of its views as to what ought to be done, and it was almost pitiful to witness individuals who are expert on taxation attempting to catch on to some will-o'-the-wisp and say that it was sound or unsound. Yet, that was what Chairman Doughton, Democrat, North Carolina, and his committee asked them to do.

Perhaps I ought to explain for the benefit of those not acquainted with tax legislation that there is nothing so important in a tax bill as the exact language.

Wheeler's Suggestion

One benefit has accrued from this situation, however, and I hope, as I believe everyone else desiring good government and proper laws hopes, that it will result in a tax bill generally more acceptable than has been proposed thus far. The maelstrom of discussion that has arisen from the house ways and means committee hearings has made a good many people "tax conscious." Being "tax conscious" at this time, a good many men capable of thinking straight have begun to offer suggestions.

I have been receiving some of them myself, and one that has come to me has impressed me so much that I am going to use the substance of it in this column. It comes to me from Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, widely known business executive and banker of Chicago. Mr. Wheeler has been recognized for a quarter of a century as a man who is given to looking rather far into the future and for his ability to analyze problems, circumstances and conditions on a long-term basis rather than on urgency of current requirements.

"Since the consideration of the corporate surplus tax act began," Mr. Wheeler wrote me, "I have watched the proceedings closely for some alternative proposal that would produce a substantial tax revenue and yet tend to strengthen the program of the administration to assure continuing business recovery, create definite added employment in industries still down, and lower production costs and prices to the ultimate cosumer.

"No one denies that increased federal revenue by taxation is imperative, but it may be open to argument whether this can best be produced by the direct route of tax levies to cover full requirement or by beginning with a plan that will produce a large proportion of the requirements and permit the use of the remainder to accomplish the results first above stated.

"The proposal is very simple, quite capable of being written into legislative provisions; it would carry a clear guarantee of useful results and reach the final full requirements of the government by progressively increasing taxable profits.

"I propose that whatever per cent of undistributed profits may be determined upon as the tax base, permission shall be given for a draw-back or retention of say 20, 25 or 33⅓ per cent on condition that this amount shall be used for capital expenditure to improve and cheapen production and distribution facilities.

"The draw-back may be by repayment to the taxpayer upon voucher evidence that the amount has been actually expended or by credit upon the second year's tax levy.

"Corporations will not fail to use this remainder and perhaps even add to it out of their available corporate resources.

Stimulate Industries

"Permanent goods industries will at once be stimulated by the knowledge that purchases will be made to an aggregate of the draw-back, and stimulation of employment must result in most needed quarters.

"The universality of this improvement in production and distribution facilities will create the competitive conditions that will compel savings to be passed on to consumers, but if any corporation tries to hold the added profits they will be taxed away in the following years.

"Living standards may be raised by making more commodities come within the range of prices the public will pay.

"Forced distribution in dividends to escape corporate high brackets will find a large part being paid to stockholders taxed in very low brackets and the result over all is not unlikely to prove disappointing.

"Increased tax rates on income or earnings leads to the struggle to avoid payment by every device that can be developed. It may be that this plan of draw-back would distinctly modify this tendency."

It is the first time that I have heard from any source the suggestion that the tax law should be made an instrument to encourage business recovery and promote employment. All of the objections heretofore have been directed at the character of the proposal and have not included constructive thoughts which could be used as a new base. Mr. Wheeler's plan may not be complete. It may not represent an answer to the tax needs in their entirety, but it must be said in its favor that it suggests an approach to the necessary answer and embodies therein a plan of action which will not kill the goose that lays the golden egg. In other words, it has been proved too many times to require discussion that higher tax rates reduce the incentive and the chief opposition to the administration proposal is just that. It takes away the incentive of the corporations to make more money which would be available for taxation. The Wheeler proposal, therefore, offers an incentive to corporations to proceed with plans of expanding their operation and thereby increase the number of workers on their payrolls.

Nearing Tax Limit

I repeat that I do not know whether the Wheeler program is the complete answer but the fact that a man of his status in the country's business life is giving consideration to the tax problem on a long-term basis leads certainly to two conclusions. These conclusions are, first, that the country is nearing the limits of what might be called reasonable taxation and, second, that a very great majority of our people believe some consideration should be given to the need for an end to government spending.

If taxation has reached the point where an overexpanded federal government requires so much money that it must take away the backlogs, the reserves of business, then it is quite apparent that a shrinkage in this structure called government must begin. If it does not, one could reasonably say that government credit is endangered, or will be if the spending continues much longer.

We have been using up our resources actually in billions for the construction of many different types of things from which no earnings accrue. Then, in addition, I think no one can deny but that there has been widespread waste of these funds.

Ethiopia Rains Bombs
Six Marriage Troubles
Marilyn Miller Is Dead
Another Big Question

Arthur Brisbane

Addis Ababa is bombed by Italian planes from more than a mile above the city, natives shooting at the Italian pilots with rifles that could not possibly carry one-quarter of the distance. Correspondents with receiving sets listened to the Italian pilots talking to each other by radio. Haile Selassie, hurrying south, was not at home when they called. That war should soon be over.

Dr. Alice E. Johnson, psychiatrist of Philadelphia's Municipal court, gives six reasons for marriage failures. They are: Different family backgrounds of husband and wife; relatives interfering, especially mothers-in-law; infidelity; incompatability; alcoholism, and a desire to "dominate." There is a seventh reason, to be found in the nature of man, who is still 98 per cent in the age of barbarism.

Marilyn Miller is dead, only thirty-eight years old. The little town of Findlay, Ohio, or the bigger town of New York, might well erect some monument to her memory. She contributed a great deal to human cheerfulness and happiness, and it may be said of her, as Samuel Johnson said, referring to the death of the great actor, Garrick, that her death "eclipsed the gayety of nations and impoverished the public's stock of harmless pleasure."

A lady who signs "B. A. G." is interested in very serious things. She writes: "The more I hear of those big armies, the more I am reminded of the huge population of hell. What is your idea of hell?"

That big question may be answered later. An aged colored man once told his pastor: "I don't believe in hell, because I don't think any constitution could stand it."

"It worries me," says a lady, "that so many men are afraid of poverty here upon earth, and not afraid of hell." Miss B. A. G. is certain that hell is real, a belief that must be comforting to those anxious to have the wicked punished.

Winthrop W. Aldrich, head of the Chase National bank, biggest in America, knows about money, as did his father before him, the late senator from Rhode Island, who invented the Federal Reserve plan and put it through. Mr. Aldrich thinks it would not be a good idea to turn money loose and encourage a speculative, stock-gambling boom. He remembers 1929.

Under certain circumstances "the prospect of inflation is very grave indeed," says Mr. Aldrich.

When a woman starts, she keeps going, nearly always. Nothing could stop Joan of Arc, Dr. Mary Walker, or Nellie Bly on her trip around the world. Now Amy Johnson, married name Mollison, sets out alone in a streamlined monoplane to beat the record on a flight to Cape Town and back.

All alone, down to the other side of the world and back again, over ocean, forests, wild beasts and wilder men. And fools used to say women lacked courage!

An offensive and defensive treaty between Japan and Germany, like the one between France and Russia, is considered a certainty.

It should be possible for nations that want to survive and prosper to get together and let others that must fight kill each other off until they tire of it. This country, at least, should carry out that plan.

Japan and Russia have passed from the "warning" stage to border fighting on the Russian side. Planes, war tanks and heavy artillery are taken across the Manchukuo border by Russia, and that "looks like business."

Russia will soon know how much Mongolia will be worth as a protection against Japan, and Europe may soon know the value of Russia as a protection against Asia.

The Canadian Press news service says Canada's wealth has shrunk almost six thousand million dollars since 1929. That will be only a temporary shrinkage.

You know that England is worried about something when you read that she now demands that the league establish an oil embargo against Italy. A little late, but it is explained that England is outraged by Italy's use of poison gas against the Ethiopians.

Mussolini used something worse than poison gas against England when he occupied the Lake Tana region.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, a pleasant, likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a terrific rain storm. He makes himself at home. Six years ago his father had died in China. The lad, Barry Gilbert, does not recollect ever having had a mother. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; a chauffeur, Evans; a cook and a maid. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter for his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. On the way to Montauk, where he intended to disappear, he assists Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia, whose car had broken down. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding.

The Duke touched a button, and Willetts came.

"Where's Evans?"

"In the garage, sir. With his wife."

"Ask him to run me down to the village. I want to send a telegram to my mother."

"Very good, sir. The car'll be here in a minute or two, sir. And I'll hold dinner."

Barry never thought any harder than he did during that short ride. What could he say that would make his mother still happier, and yet mean nothing if the message fell into the hands of that hard, old man?

"Radio received," he wirelessed at last. "Will do my best. Writing. Willetts."

She would understand.

The reaction came after dinner. "Maudlin, that's what I am," thought the Duke. "Just before I get a message signed 'Mother.' The first one I ever got."

"Damn fool trick—sending that wireless. Sooner or later, she's going to find out it was fake, and then what good will I have done?"

Thursday's dinner started off on the wrong foot.

The Duke wore his new flannels and his old gray coat. It was not a warm evening, but he had nothing else to wear.

He could see Patricia taking him in. She was lovely in cherry-colored crepe de chine, and the Judge immaculate in black tie and dinner jacket. "You said we could fight things out on the tennis court," the Duke apologized, "and I'm afraid that stuck in my mind. The truth is my luggage hasn't turned up, and I had to wear anything I could find."

"You should have worn a strip of bunting, and brought boxing gloves," the Judge laughed. "If you and Pat are going at it as you did at the club."

"What would happen if we agreed about anything?" asked Patricia.

"I'd be wrong, Miss Hambridge; I'd be wrong!"

The retort was no more his own than the shirt on his back, but he was rewarded for it by an appreciative flash in the girl's eyes.

The girl chattered about everything.

Hard-boiled. A modern, and proud of it. Why should people be proud of being "modern"; a state, like kingship, that you achieved merely by being born? And, so far as modernity was a point of view, why preen yourself because you didn't believe in anything except your own right to be happy?

This girl had had no contact with life. Walled about in a pleasant garden, she delivered herself of smart, brittle opinions of conditions she had never experienced, people she had never seen. But you couldn't help liking her. And it began to be evident that she liked him. "You're different, at least," she said. "Different from any other man I know. Really not a bit like a rich man's son."

"I've been on my own a good while," he reminded her.

Barry learned a good deal about his adopted father that night. And, when Patricia left them for a few minutes, the Judge repeated, "He's certainly no sentimentalist—that gentleman. We're supposed to be friends and his paper goes on attacking me. The Civic association—that's nothing on earth but The Globe. And now they're all at it. Talking about my taking orders from Tammany."

"What's the use of stopping one paper?" Patricia inquired, entering the room. "The others would keep right on. Did you ever read any of the things they wrote about Abraham Lincoln? Be a brave old gentleman, and don't let it bother you."

She laughed, but her eyes were very tender as she laid her hands on the Judge's shoulders.

"That's why I like her," thought the Duke. "Because I see what she'd be if somebody scraped off the enamel. She's got the makings of some girl!"

It was after midnight when Barry climbed into his car, calling back. "Remember, you're dining with me next Thursday!"

"All right. And we're having house guests over the following week-end. The Winslows. My mother was Mrs. Winslow's sister. Peter's a prominent lawyer, and it won't hurt you to know him. And I've got an old school friend coming from Boston. Will you dine with us again that Friday?"

"I'll board with you, if you ask me!" Barry replied exuberantly. "But that lets me out," he vowed, on the way home. "This can't go on forever. Something's sure to break, and I don't want it to break anywhere near that girl."

Standing before the mirror, in faultless evening dress, on Thursday, he thought the thing out. "If I can't get a white-collar job with these clothes, and the new feeling this thing has given me, I'm a washout. I'd like to make good now. Darned if I know why, but I would!"

He made up his mind to go to town the next day, and have another try at it.

He was still contemplating himself in the glass.

On the whole, it was a very successful evening. The Judge seemed even more worried than he had been a week before, but Barry's good humor was irresistible. Patricia had asked about his experience in Florida, and he found himself combining purely imaginary adventure there with anecdotes of park benches and the flop house in New York. Truth and fiction blended so wonderfully, and seemed so real.

The Hambidges went home early, but in much better spirits than they had brought with them, and Patricia paused at the door to remind him of their engagement for the following Friday. "You'll have to come the week after that, too," she said. "My Boston friend can't get here next week, and she's especially anxious to meet you."

Patricia must have written about him, then. By Golly, he would get that job—if only to show her that he could do something better than dance.

Barry's first two days in town were fruitless. There weren't many studios in New York, and they didn't seem to be doing much. I'm going to look over the 'Business Opportunities' in the newspapers," said the Duke.

Most of them were opportunities to part with a little money. But Barry didn't give up hope.

On Wednesday—eighteen days after his advent at Southampton—the Duke got a letter from Mrs. Ridder.

My Own Dear Boy: I write this as we are leaving Cherbourg, and shall try to post it at Southampton. How I wish it were our Southampton, and that I were about to see you. Your radio message arrived duly. I understood, of course, and it made me happier than I have been in years. Don't laugh, but I have slept with it under my pillow.

I wanted to write you at once, but it has been hard to get a minute away from your father. He really is very ill, and a little irritable, and the doctor says any shock might prove serious. Of course, I want to tell him about you, but perhaps it's as well that I can't just yet. We shall be away until the end of July, at least, and perhaps longer. By that time I shall have had such good news of you as will enable me to win him over. He does care for you, dear. As much as I do. Perhaps more, and that is why his pride has been hurt, and he has seemed so hard.

I do hope you have given up drinking. That has been your real enemy. And I do hope you will find work. Nothing else will go so far in persuading your father. He must change his will. It isn't the money I'm thinking of so much as its bitterness. He has taken care of the household expenses at Southampton. (Did I tell you that we were going to open the place, anyway? We've had Willetts ever since we've had the house, and our agreement is that his winter lay-off isn't to last over six months.) Your father gave him his check when he came to the hotel the morning we sailed, and will send him one every month, to pay servants, etc. I am enclosing another hundred dollars for you. Cash, because my bank account's rather low now. That's all, except that I am counting the days to your letter at Nauheim. I want that letter, dear. You can never know how much I've wanted it, and how long, and how I pray that nothing may happen now. One false step on your part—one foolish exploit like that at college—if he knew, would end everything forever. And he would know. Ill as he is, he still has his newspaper sent him, and he still reads every word.

If I seem over-anxious, you will understand. You are almost all I have.

Mother.

P. S. Don't fail to write.

For the first time since he had inserted his knife blade under the dry putty of that window, the Duke felt ashamed of himself. Deeply and thoroughly ashamed.

"What can I do?" he said. "I can't write. And what would be the use? One letter, and then silence. Some day, she's sure to find out that her boy never came near Southampton . . . I wish to God I could find that boy!"

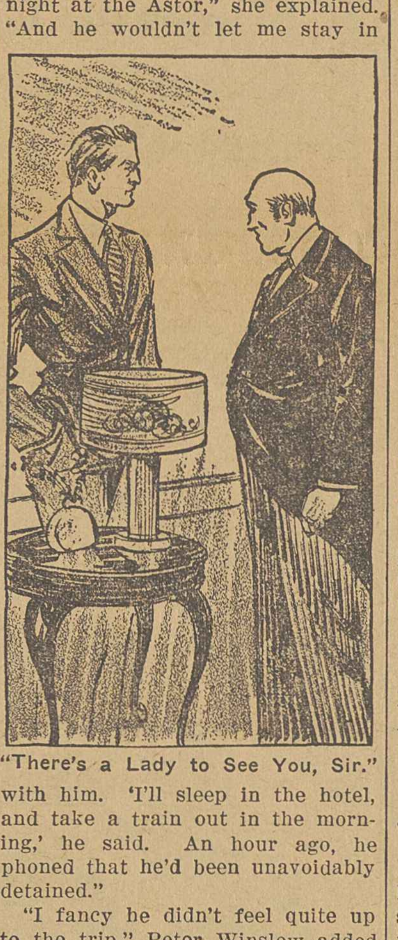
Thursday's evening paper was full of Judge Hambidge.

"Hambidge Decision Due," the headline read, "As Civic Association Links Holding Corporation with Boss Kelly."

The link didn't seem very strong. Kelly, who evidently was some potatoes in Tammany Hall, had once employed one of the "alleged dummy directors" of the corporation that owned the property to be used in widening Jefferson street. "In the face of this sensational disclosure," the paper asked editorially, "will Supreme Court Judge Hambidge have the courage to give these men the fabulous sums they ask for their rookies? Judge Hambidge insists that he has never even met Mike Kelly. 'I have never spoken a word to him in my life.' Judge Hambidge's decision is long over due. When it is handed down, the city's voters will know whether Boss Kelly has ever spoken to Judge Hambidge."

After that, Barry wasn't surprised to find the Judge absent from the next night's dinner party at his house. Evidently, the pack was in full cry. Friday's evening paper had a headline that ran clear across the sheet. Still unfolded, Barry had left the paper lying on the library table, with Boss Kelly's name filling most of its visible quarter-page.

Naturally, Patricia was disturbed. "Father spoke at a banquet last night at the Astor," she explained. "And he wouldn't let me stay in with him. 'I'll sleep in the hotel, and take a train out in the morning,' he said. An hour ago, he phoned that he'd been unavoidably detained."



"There's a Lady to See You, Sir."

"I fancy he didn't feel quite up to the trip," Peter Winslow added to Patricia's apology. "The speech must have taken it out of him, and then afterward, he saw a woman killed by a taxi-cab."

"Oh—Peter!"

"Yes. The Judge called me, early this morning, about his decision in this condemnation proceeding. He'd just sent it to the county clerk's office. And his voice sounded rather shaky. He'd gone for a walk after the dinner was over, he said, and the taxi dashed out of a side street, just as the woman stepped off the curb. The driver jammed on his brakes, and skidded right up onto the sidewalk. The usual hit-and-run business."

"What did the Judge talk about at the dinner?" Barry asked, chiefly to change the subject.

"I don't know. I haven't seen a paper today."

Winslow seemed preoccupied, Barry thought, but a mighty fine fellow. A famous criminal lawyer, but so simple and kindly. He was a big chap, loosely put together, and his graying hair was loosely brushed back from a face that was square in every sense. The two men clicked at once. Barry loved Peter's manner to his wife—a soft, round, pink little woman, with worried eyes. Peter was always jollying her—gently, whimsically, protectively. "My yes-man," he said of her. "Anything I do is right."

"That's only my move to make the decision unanimous," smiled Mrs. Winslow. She had wit, in her own quiet way.

"I never met your father," the attorney remarked to Barry, in the drawing room, after dinner. "You work on his newspaper, I suppose."

"No."

"Don't you want to do anything?" he asked.

"Very much."

"What?"

"Anything."

"That won't get you far. Can you write?"

"Like the lady who was asked if she could play the piano, I don't know—I never tried."

"You should be able to write—with your father's gift of trenchant expression. You've got it, too, in conversation. My brother owns a big advertising agency. I'd like to have you meet him."

"I'd like to," said the Duke. "I do want to work." He hesitated. "I've been in town almost every day this week, looking for a job."

He caught Patricia's surprised glance.

"Come in and see me," Winslow suggested.

Just his damned luck! Here was a job—a career, probably—for the asking, and he couldn't take it. Not as John Clarke Ridder, Jr. But Patricia's eyes were still on him, so "I'll be in Monday," he said.

When he had made his adieux to the Winslows, Patricia accompanied him to the door.

"I owe you an apology," she declared. "You're not just a rich man's son. You're something quite different. And I'm—glad!"

"Some girl!"

When he reached home, Willetts was waiting in the hall.

"There's a lady to see you, sir."

"At midnight?"

"She got here around eight o'clock. And she wouldn't go. She's upstairs in the library."

"What kind of a lady?"

"Sort of glittery, if you ask me," the butler replied.

"Did she come in a car?"

"One of the station taxis, sir."

"How's she going to get back? Never mind! I can rouse Evans, if we need him. You go to bed."

Very much on guard, he climbed the stairs to the upper rooms.

Willetts was right; her eyes were "glittery." And hard. A woman who knew her way around, Barry would have said. And yet there was something tender about her, too. She had a sharp face, with a a slightly protuberant chin. Her lips and brows and lashes were heavily made up, but her hair, nondescript in color, escaped in soft waves from beneath her cheap little red beret. She wore a shabby black dress, and her shoes were badly worn.

All this, Barry observed in the long moments before she spoke.

"You're not Mr. Ridder," she said.

Her voice was hard, too. Like the girl, hard and yet pitiful. It seemed on the point of breaking.

"Yes," Barry answered. "I am."

"Not James Clarke Ridder. Not the old man."

The Duke breathed again.

"Not the old man, of course," he said. "My father's in Europe. I'm John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

The girl stared at him.

"You mean you're John Clarke Ridder's son?"

"Of course."

She kept on staring.

"Somebody's crazy," she said.

It had come, then. It was bound to come. Was Willetts listening in the hall? What would Patricia say?

"Somebody's crazy," the girl repeated, "and I don't think it's me. Or somebody's a liar, and I don't think it's him!"

And, suddenly, she began to laugh.

"No," she shrilled; "it's you! It's written all over your face! And it's funny, because you've walked into a pretty mess."

"I—?"

"If you're John Clarke Ridder, Jr., I'm your wife."

"My wife?"

She stopped laughing, as suddenly as she had begun. "That's it," she said, and her voice was harder than ever. "I'm your wife, and you're under arrest for killing a guy!"

"Under arrest?" Barry echoed. "What are you talking about?"

For answer, the girl reached across to the library table, and handed him the newspaper she had been reading when he came into the room.

"That's what John Clarke Ridder did—last night," she said. "Killed a guy. That damned skunk, Mike Kelly. Boss Kelly of Tammany Hall"

CHAPTER III

After all, she wasn't such a "glittery" lady.

For, as Barry glanced at the newspaper headlines unfolded before him, she crumpled suddenly, and dropped into the big chair.

"Steady!" the Duke admonished her. The Duke went back to those headlines. "Boss Kelly Murdered," they read. "Body Found by Servants. Skull Crushed. Midnight Caller Hunted by Police."

"Was your husband the midnight caller?" he asked.

The girl nodded wearily.

"And he's John Clarke Ridder, Jr.?"

She nodded again.

For some reason he never quite understood, the Duke had stopped wondering whether Willetts was listening outside. Instead he was thinking of a letter that lay in the drawer of the library table; a letter from a heart-hungry woman, who had written to this boy, from three thousand miles away. "I am counting the days to your letter. You can never know how much I've wanted it, and how long, and how I pray that nothing may happen now."

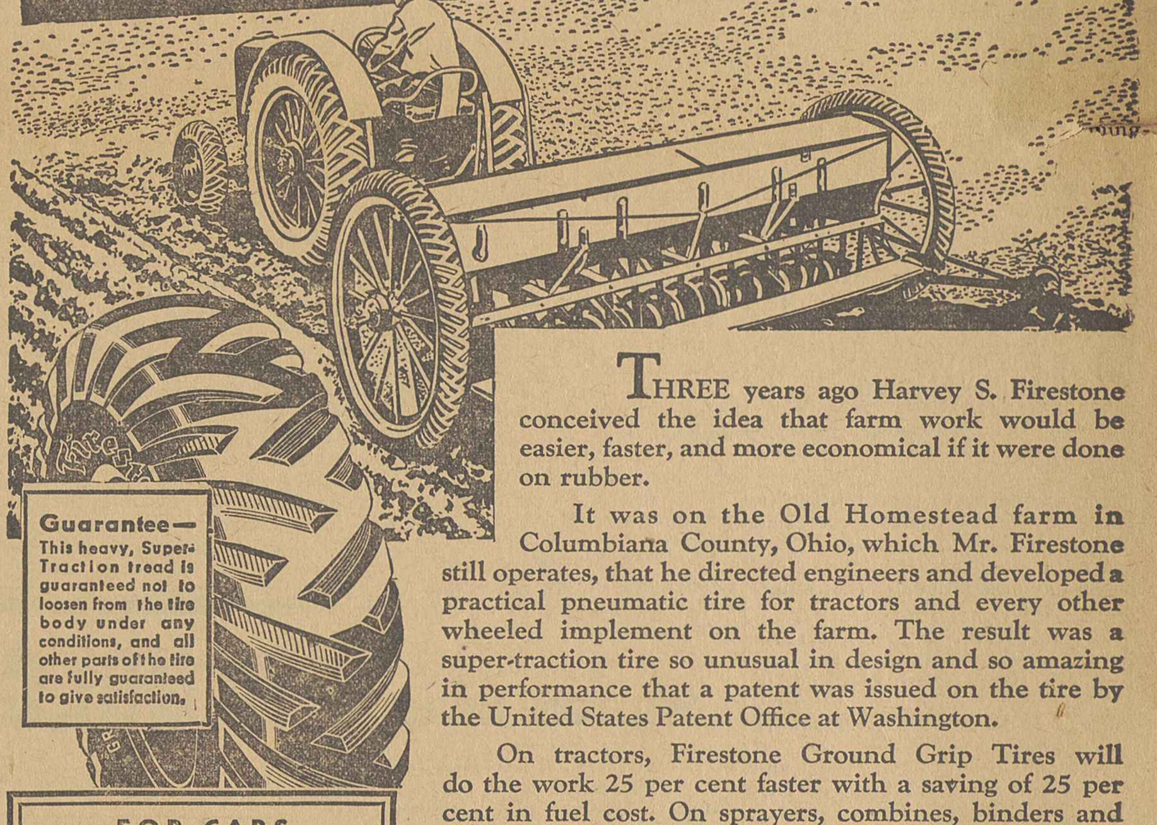
A GREAT CONTRIBUTION TO EASIER, FASTER MORE ECONOMICAL FARMING



Guarantee— This heavy, Super-Traction tread is guaranteed not to loosen from the tire body under any conditions, and all other parts of the tire are fully guaranteed to give satisfaction.

THREE years ago Harvey S. Firestone conceived the idea that farm work would be easier, faster, and more economical if it were done on rubber.

It was on the Old Homestead farm in Columbiana County, Ohio, which Mr. Firestone still operates, that he directed engineers and developed a practical pneumatic tire for tractors and every other wheeled implement on the farm. The result was a super-traction tire so unusual in design and so amazing in performance that a patent was issued on the tire by the United States Patent Office at Washington.

On tractors, Firestone Ground Grip Tires will do the work 25 per cent faster with a saving of 25 per cent in fuel cost. On sprayers, combines, binders and other farm implements they reduce draft 40 to 50 per cent; do not pack the soil, sink into soft ground or make ruts; protect equipment; do not damage crops and vines; speed up every farm operation.

One set of tires will fit several implements. Tires can be changed quickly from one implement to another. Two or three sets are all you need to take care of practically all your farm implements.

See the Firestone Tire Dealer, implement dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today—and in placing your order for new equipment, be sure to specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires on your new tractor or farm implement.

Get ready for the Big Event Day in Montevallo, Saturday, April 25. Find out about it from your merchant and tell all your friends and neighbors so they can be here for the big event.

It was currently reported Wednesday that the contract has been let for gravel surfacing the Calera-Montevallo highway, preparatory to putting down the hard surface, which, it is reasonably certain will be completed during this summer.

May we suggest this slogan: Do your dead level best. Talk for Montevallo. Work for Montevallo. Advertise for Montevallo. Trade in Montevallo. Spend in Montevallo. Do your part to help make Montevallo and its trade territory the best home on earth. We have a delightful and beautiful town. We can make it better if we will do a little more "rooting."

Called upon unexpectedly to talk about something for a few minutes at the Civic Club Wednesday, Dr. A. F. Harman made one of the most impressive discussions of the educational question in Alabama. We wish every citizen of the State might have a thorough understanding of the public education problem as it was so truthfully represented by Dr. Harman.

Cone, engineer on the Birmingham - Montgomery highway improvement job in Shelby County, stated a few days ago that all relief labor on the highway job and on the Alabama College campus job has been ordered to work in the Oak Mountain Park development. Commissioner Goode Urges Farmers To Grow More Food and Feed at Home

Montgomery, April 13. — More than $130,000,000 is sent out of this state every year for imported food and feedstuffs that should be raised on Alabama farms.

With this statement, Agricultural Commissioner R. J. Goode today appealed to farmers of Alabama to promote their own prosperity by growing more food and feed crops, not only for their own use but for home markets.

With farmers in many sections just starting Spring planting after a delay caused by heavy rains, Mr. Goode urged that more emphasis be placed on crop diversification on a "live-at-home" basis.

Of the food and feed crops adaptable to Alabama soil and climate, only 57 per cent of the state's needs are produced within our boundaries, the commissioner said.

He estimated the state consumes $312,031,000 worth of these commodities yearly but produces only $181,471,543 worth, making it necessary to import $130,557.457 worth from other states.

"Not only would the farmer benefit directly but the entire state would be richer if this money were kept in our own trade channels," Mr. Goode declared.

Of 12 products listed by Mr. Goode, only sweet and Irish potatoes are grown by Alabama farmers in abundance sufficient to meet the state's own needs. Production of these two crops combined exceeds home consumption by 66 per cent.

He estimated the state's production of the two potato crops at 9,667,900 bushels annually, against 5,259,000 bushels needed leaves $4,408,900 worth of potatoes to be exported to other states each year.

On the other side of the picture, the production of oats shows the greatest percentage of deficit. The state produces only 2,090,000 bushels or seven per cent of the 31,000,000 bushels of oats it consumes yearly, making it necessary to import $17,028,700 worth.

Home production of corn, amounting to 47,950,000 bushels a year, falls short of the 75,000,000 bushels needed by 36 per cent. Corn imports from other states amount to $20,280,000 annually.

Production of hay in the state amounts to 421,000 tons and consumption 1,546,000 tons a year, necessitating the purchase of approximately $11,000,000 worth of this product every year.

Sixty per cent of the 436,590,000 pounds of meat eaten in Alabama each year is produced here, Mr. Goode's study shows. At six cents a pound as the average price farmers get for meat animals on the hoof, this means $10,486,160 is spent outside the state for this product.

Milk purchased outside the state costs $40,366,800, the commissioner estimates. The state consumes 201,834,000 gallons a year, produces only 132,502,000 gallons.

About $6,316,520 is spent for imported eggs annually, there being 79,380,000 dozen consumed and 62,804,000 dozen—80 per cent—produced here.

Home gardens provide only 63 per cent of the garden vegetables consumed in the state. There are about 75,000 acres planted in gardens every year but it would take about 120,000 acres to fill the needs. About $17,760,000 worth of vegetables are imported.

Of 3,750,000 bushels of apples consumed here annually, only 588,000 bushels are grown in the state. This means $3,307,500 worth are brought in from other sections.

The record with peaches is better. Of 1,425,000 bushels consumed in a year, 817,000 bushels are grown in Alabama. At $1 a bushel imports amount to about $608,000 yearly.

Only 34 per cent of the butter used in the state is produced here. There are 92,610,000 pounds consumed each year, against 33,000,000 pounds produced here. Approximately $15,378,198 worth is imported.

Of 19,000,000 acres of farm land in the state, only about 8,000,000 is now under cultivation, Commissioner Goode said. Only 4,396,000 acres additional, he estimates, are required to produce the state's needs.

Though much of the 19,000,000 acres listed as farm land in submarginal, he belieces farmers would have little difficulty in finding sufficient suitable land for fulfilling these needs. He emphasizes the building up of lands now in cultivation.

Acreage required to produce the present imported portions of various crops, he said, would be as follows: Corn, 1,800,000 acres; hay, 900,000; oats, 1,445,000; gardens, 45,000; orchards, 4,396,000.

To produce the additional meat and dairy products needed in the state, he added, would require 1,550,000 additional milk cows, 314,000 more beef cattle, 632,000 additional hogs and about 800,000 hens additional.

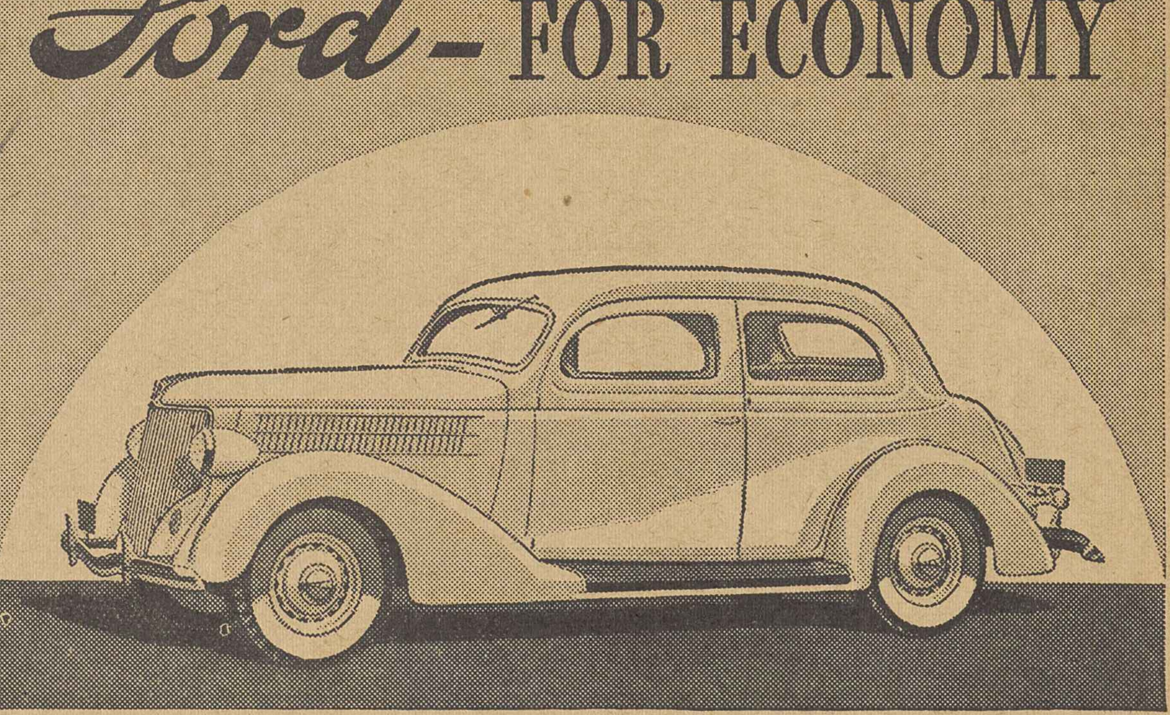
Ford - FOR ECONOMY



"The Ford V-8 uses less fuel and oil for the power it gives than any other car we have ever made

AND ITS UP-KEEP COST IS THE LOWEST"

ENTHUSIASTIC sales talk often begins and ends with gasoline mileage. Some salesmen would like you to believe it is the whole story of automobile economy. But drivers ought to know better. For, the fact is, it's way down the list.

The big items of car economy are low first cost, low up-keep cost and low depreciation. Savings here can make a great deal of difference in cost per mile. Gasoline mileage is more of a talking point than an economy factor.

Check up and you will find that the difference between 17 and 19 miles a gallon is less than $10 for a whole year's average driving (8400 miles at 18 cents a gallon). Here are the big items that make the Ford the most economical car:

More value for every dollar you pay.
Lower cost for repairs and service.
Long life. Slow depreciation.

Quality means economy and the 1936 Ford V-8 gives you more real quality than any other low-price car. No other car under $1645 has a V-8 engine. No other low-price car has Center-Poise Riding, safe, sure mechanical brakes and Safety Glass all around at no extra cost.

$25 A MONTH WITH USUAL LOW DOWN-PAYMENT, BUYS ANY NEW FORD V-8 CAR ON NEW UCC ½% PER MONTH FINANCE PLANS.

It's Vacation Time So Let Guests Run the Column

Hugh Bradley is vacationing. And so, this week his shoes are filled by Col. Jacob Ruppert, owner of the New York Yankees, Chick Meehan, Manhattan college football coach and John G. Jackson, president of the United States Golf association.

By Col. Jacob Ruppert

I GUESS I was born with a couple of silver spoons in my mouth.

By that I mean that the man is twice lucky who can combine recreation with business the way I have been doing the last twenty-odd years since I bought the Yankees with Colonel Huston. And seven years later I owned the club all by myself. I never regretted either transaction.

I would do it all over again gladly. Every day I like baseball better. The game has its headaches—but its thrills, too. And what business doesn't have a headache? The winning hit in the ninth inning with the bases full leaves me as limp as a kid—and just owning a ball club has its kick, too.

Col. Ruppert

Just now I've discovered a new one in the chain store system. I didn't believe in the Branch Rickey idea at first; then I realized that it was the fairest system to the ball player. Tying a string to a young player and sending him out on option doesn't give him a fair chance to make the most of his ability.

Now there are seven cities in the Yankee chain. We're developing our own players—Joe DiMaggio will probably be our last big purchase.

I like to sit back in my grandstand seat and watch the youngsters fight their way up through the different classifications to their big moment—opening day at the Yankee stadium.

No psychologist could ask for a better opportunity to study character. It's a study of temperament and actions. It's mighty interesting to see how the boy reacts to his opening. Some of them keep hustling all the time. Others let well enough alone.

The hardest thing is to change a lazy youngster into a hustler of the Ty Cobb type. It's really seldom done. Ball playing is a natural gift like being an actor, a lawyer or a great singer. There is always the man who steps to the front.

My first love was horse racing, but it doesn't wear as well as baseball. The thrill in a horse race lasts only a couple of minutes. A ball game lasts two hours.

But baseball is a game for sunshine. That's why I'm against night baseball for the big leagues. It will never come to stay. The fan likes his seat in the sun.

Yankees of '27 Were Best Club Ever

I've been asked if I ever expect to get another Babe Ruth. If I said no it would be in the nature of a baseball bromide. About all I can do is hope. That's one of the charms of the game—you never know what you may dig up.

My best ball club was the Yanks of 1927. It was the best club ever put together. It could come through any time.

But don't make the mistake of belittling my present Yankees. Gehrig and Gomez are sure to have better years, and the operation on Crossetti's knee was successful. Rolfe and Selkirk are improved players and Roy Johnson shapes up well for the outfield. I wouldn't swap my pitching staff for any in the league.

Naturally the Tigers are the team to beat. They have come through twice in a row. The Red Sox still need pitchers, but are pretty powerful looking otherwise. I always fear the Indians.

Well, it's still a great game—the game we all love, player and fan and owner alike. If I could develop another Ruth in my chain store I want to say that it would make up for all the losses you have to take in the minors. It would make up for them financially and in the pride of achievement.

But there's no kick in winning all the time. I don't even know that I want my Yankees to be 100 per cent perfect.

By Chick Meehan

DOING a guest column for Hugh Bradley is a cheerful reminder of the pleasant visits we had every Saturday night during the football season.

Chick Meehan

At the end of last season the football interest of the country was concentrated on the Southwest and many people have wondered how that came about. The only explanation that I can give is that football, with its interest and wild enthusiasm, has reached fever heat in different territories throughout the United States at different times. Texas was the latest.

Back in the old days when football was getting its foothold as a national game the Big Three dominated the East to such an extent that when All-American teams were picked at the end of the season eight of the eleven would be members of the Big Three and the few remaining selections would be made mostly from the other large colleges in the East. From the East the enthusiasm spread to the Midwest and reached such glowing heights that the Western conference, composed of the Big Ten insitutions in the Mid-west, was formed.

This was a fine move for football, as well as the individual colleges, since each college in the Midwest was anxious to outdo the others and the conference served as a check on every member of the group.

From the Midwest, football moved into the Missouri valley, and I believe the game in the Missouri valley, over a long period of years, has progressed on a more even keel than in any section in the United States.

The South came along next, with John Heiseman's Georgia Tech Golden Tornado leading the parade. Every southern institution has had great teams at one time or another ever since, and in my opinion, southern football always will be of the the first grade, because the preliminary training season comes in February. All the Dixie coaches take advantage of six or eight weeks of practice, with the result that their teams are the best ball handlers in the country.

Southwest Is Now Football Stronghold

Following the South, the wild wave of enthusiasm brought great football teams to the west coast. A man named Henderson, who coached Southern California, and has since been forgotten, did more to stimulate interest in the sport on the coast than any of the famous men that have succeeded him.

Now we come to the Southwest. When S. M. U. and Louisiana State, which is considered a southwestern team, although it is in the Southern conference, stepped out and showed the way, it didn't take long for Texas Christian, Texas U., and Texas A. and M. to fall in line. This is the sizzling hotbed of football of the nation today and, with the Texas Centennial going on this year, it should be even hotter.

By John G. Jackson

Cities throughout the country are becoming aware of the fact that many of the prominent competitors of today are drawn from the ranks of public links golfers and are hastening to complete bigger and better public courses—such as the one at Bethpage State park in Farmingdale, L. I., where the national championship is to be played.

This development of public links golf is bound, in an extremely short time, to react to the benefit of private clubs and the game of golf itself. Youngsters, now unable to stand the tariff of private club membership, are getting a sound grounding in the game, one that will stand them in good stead when, as adults, they can afford to join a club where their friends and business associates are already members.

The growth of public links is merely another indication that the game is ever growing, never static. It is improving and developing from year to year, with promising youngsters continually popping up into the headlines to serve as a spur to other youthful competitors.

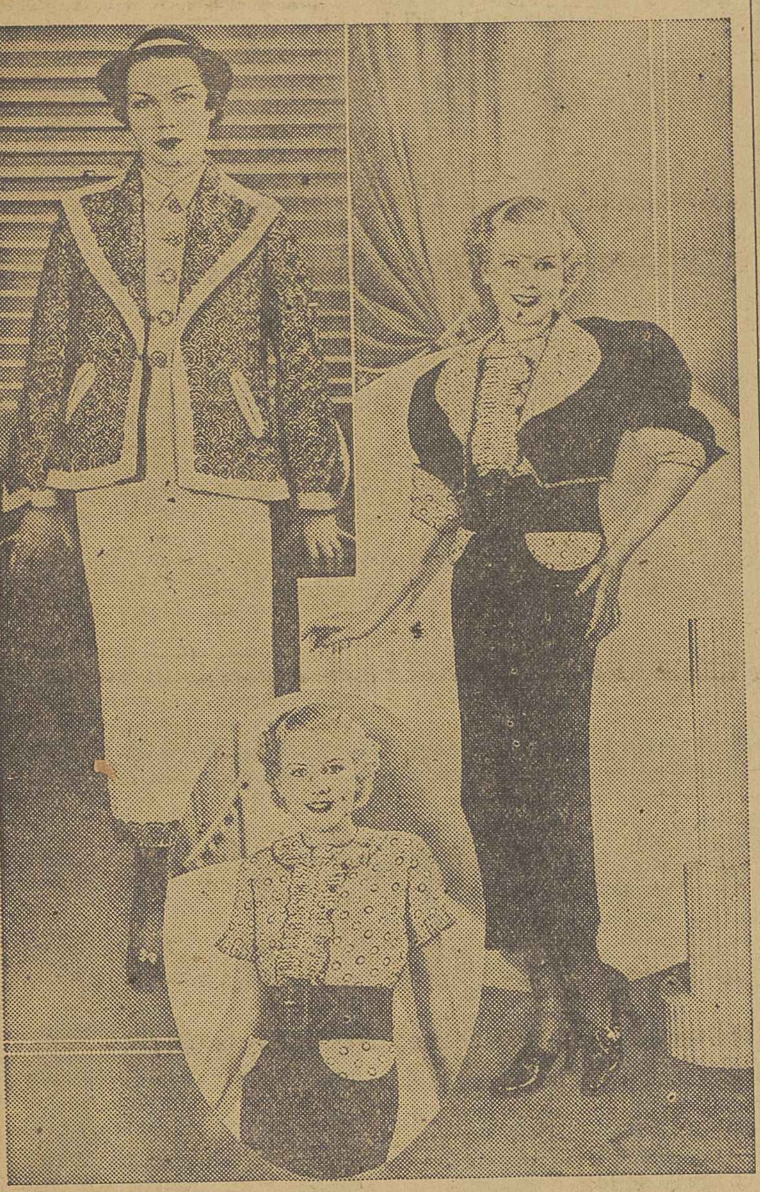
Golf Attendance Ruled by Talent

We have found, in the past, that golf attendance is ruled more by the caliber of the competition than by the location of the tournament. As the outstanding example of that principle, I can best refer to the case of Bobby Jones. When Bobby was in his prime he could jam the galleries and make the marshals' work a nightmare no matter where he was playing.

The average golfer probably does not realize just how much tournament receipts mean to golf and the United States Golf association. In proof I offer figures from a recent report of the executive committee, which show that over a period of nine years a net disbursement of 98 per cent of the dues paid by member clubs was devoted to the work of the greens section.

Jacket Costumes Lead Style Parade

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



JACKET costume! A mere matter of two words and about the most important chapter in the story of the new spring and summer fashions is told. The consensus among style creators who know whereof they speak is that becomingness, femininity and individuality are the keynotes of women's fashions this season.

The new costume with its inevitable jacket (if not a cunningly devised cape) does just that. It flatters, it feminizes and being in a widely versatile mood, it tunes to type at the will of its ingenious designer. So it is that the colorful spring parade is mostly a matter of just one jacket costume after another.

Trekking along in the procession, boleros of Spanish extraction hobnob with jackets that have gone obviously Chinese. Hosts of smart Etons vary the program together with a goodly showing of stylish fingertip jackets. The new "baby reefer" and the just as new and important "baby swagger" are likewise keeping step to the spring song of fashion.

The new redingote, Eton and bolero costumes in navy or black, which are considered fashion "firsts" on the style program, form intriguing alliances with prints that pride themselves on their gay coloring. Jacket linings, sleeve facings, blouses and innumerable trimming details of bizarre print in contrast to monotones challenge designers to work out stunning effects.

Jackets of bright print or embroidery worn with gown or skirt in a solid color are outstanding. This is true not only of silk and woolen ensembles but swanky printed linens and colorful peasant-print cottons are especially attractive styles, according to this formula.

At a recent preview of foremost styles presented by the Chicago Wholesale Market district to an audience of fashion enthusiasts who had gathered from far and near to witness this significant event, the idea of the jacket costume was dramatically stressed for both daytime and evening dress. The jacketed models herewith illustrated were selected from this showing of surpassingly chic clothes as being not only practical but also flatteringly wearable.

The mode to the right features a swank bolero type. The brief jacket is lined, cuffed and collared with the same print that fashions the frilly blouse pictured with bolero removed in inset. The fine pleatings, the peplum tabs below the wide belt, the straight narrow silhouette of the skirt and especially the huge full-at-top sleeves are highly significant style details.

The perfectly stunning spectator-sports costume to the left eloquently bespeaks the "reason why" jacket ensembles are at the top o' the mode. A style so breathtaking as thtis will coax a burst of enthusiasm from even the most blase. The dress of voguish sheer white woolen is topped with a jacket of unique cut that is handsomely all-over braided with soutache. The original mode is bright navy but black on white is equally as effective. Which leads us to tell you that some of the smartest costumes going this season are white worked with black soutache or made up with effective touches of black-and-white print. Note the scroll soutache finishing the skirt hemline. It tells you that designful hemlines are a very important style gesture.

PLEATED SLEEVES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Designers are doing interesting things with sleeves. Pleated sleeves are very high style this season. This frock of dusty pink moss crepe makes appeal because of its sophisticated simplicity. Its pleated sleeves give an air of distinction. The belt, tiny collar and felt beret are in the popular Dubonnet shade. Suggestive of spring and employing all the modern touches is the lovely petit point bag in pastoral design by Madame Jolles of Vienna. This charming bag with its dark ground and subdued colorings, with jeweled clasps at the side of the gold frame makes a striking contrast to the gown.

LACE NOW INVADES WHOLE DRESS FIELD

The new summer collections in Paris are always eagerly awaited. This year they have brought more in novelty and charm than could have been anticipated. Femininity characterizes the fashions offered by all of the great designers, and in achieving feminine charm the couturiers have chosen the preferred medium—lace. This return to favor of a material so long overlooked by the mode is outstanding, and it has come back not only in the classic varieties of lace to which we have become accustomed, but in many new and fascinating forms, which seem very definitely fabrics.

These new types are being employed widely for street dresses and summer suits, definitely tailored in effect. The prominence given lace in this type of clothes has also called attention to the praticalness and charm of cotton nets and tulle as a material for tailoring. Suits of these materials are shown and the new laces are utilized for long redingotes which veil evening frocks in an alluring mist.

Pleats Prominent

Pleats play a prominent role in spring fashions. Sleeves, bodices and skirts of day frocks are worked in fine pleats and evening gowns have insets of sunray pleating. Short fan-pleated capes top several evening frocks.

Circular Veils

Circular veils are being shown in London on the front of small hats.

MIRIAM HOPKINS sailed for Europe the other day, planning to spend her six weeks vacation traveling in central Europe and Russia, mostly by air. She left her little boy, Michael, in school in New York, which was hard to do, for she adores that small, yellow haired chap, and is doing a beautiful job of bringing him up. But he's rather young to go traipsing about Europe. She stayed in New York long enough to hear her latest picture, "These Three," which she made with Merle Oberon and Joel McCrae, hailed as one of the best pictures made in a long, long time. She also stayed long enough to annoy the people who wanted to interview her by promising each day that she'd see the interviewers the next, and then avoiding practically all of them.

And that's bad business; Katherine Hepburn proved that.

Of course you know how she has been treating interviewers for these many moons; just snubbing them right and left. A while ago she decided to give in, and told the press agent for her company that she would see a representative from one paper. And, according to the story, he began with the New York paper with the biggest circulation and went right down the line, and met with nothing but refusals!

Some years ago Willie and Eugene Howard, who are doing that new radio feature, "Folies Bergere of the Air," were appearing in a musical comedy. They lent a helping hand to a young man who needed a start; being the show's feature stars, they could do it. And now the world knows his name—John Charles Thomas.

The news reels brought home to many of us the full tragedy of the recent floods, and it is a relief to know that some funny things happened in the midst of all that horror. The news reel companies usually have local people who, if anything interesting happens, photograph it on the chance the company will buy it. During the Pennsylvania floods, a free lance camera man phoned one of the news reel companies in New York, announcing that he had some good stuff. He was urged to send it right in by train. He said he couldn't, that no trains were running. The company checked up and found that one would leave that afternoon. Did he have a boat? Yes, he had his boat tied to the window sill. Well, then, he was to get into that boat and take his film to the railway station. "But I can't," he protested. "I fell out of the boat once and got wet, so I left my suit at the tailor's, and the water came in and washed away everything in his place — and I haven't any other clothes!"

Dietrich

They're still having a hard time at the Paramount studio with "I Loved a Soldier"; pretty soon people are going to think there's a jinx on it. Marlene Dietrich, you'll recall, walked out on it. Margaret Sullavan was then borrowed for it, and broke her arm. Nobody seems to care for the leading role—so some unknown girl may get it, and if she does, she'll be a sensational success, because that's the way things happen in Hollywood.

There's no stopping these amateur hours on the radio. WMCA and the Inter-city chain now have an Ugly Duckling amateur hour, (for singers who feel that lack of beauty keeps them from succeeding), a Comedy Writer amateur hour (this is the place for you if you want to be funny on the air; a stock company of professionals does the broadcasting; you just send your material in), and another one for song writers.

Improvement of Pasture Is Easy

Wild White Clover Will Do the Trick, Says Expert in Agronomy.

By Prof. D. B. Johnstone-Wallace, Cornell Agronomy Department.—WNU Service.

Growing two blades of grass where one grew before is a simple matter. Even better results have been achieved. Experiments at Cornell show that four blades of grass and two leaves of wild clover can be grown where one blade of grass and one leaf of devil's paint-brush grew before.

On pasture improvement is is not an expensive process. An effective program should not exceed two dollars a year for each cow kept, on the farm, or its equivalent in other animals.

The essentials of pasture improvement are: an adequate supply of phosphorus in the soil by liberal applications of superphosphate; the use of lime, in addition, on very acid soils; and sometimes potash on light, sandy soils.

More important even than fertilization is the management of grazing. Improved pastures should be grazed closely and should not be permitted to exceed four inches in height at any time. Ungrazed herbage must be plowed closely once or more during the grazing season. The combination of fertilization and close grazing results in the development of a dense sward of wild white clover and valuable pasture grasses.

Pale Butter in Demand in Markets of the East

Danger to Middle western dairy farmers is seen in the increasing demand in eastern markets for "pale" or "white" butter. Pale butter is produced in northern countries such as Canada and Latvia, where cows get a minimum of green pasture and hay cured to a green color. Not enough pale butter can be produced in this country to satisfy the increasing demand, says the Prairie Farmer.

Carotene is responsible for the natural yellow color of midwestern and southern butter. Green pasture grass and hay cured to retain its green color contain large amounts of carotone. When cows are on pasture for a considerable part of the year, the butter always has a deep yellow color.

The Middle West's natural yellow butter is worth more money than pale butter because of its higher nutritional value. To the farmer of the Middle West who supplies the cream from which 85 per cent of the butter produced in this country is made, the trend towards increased consumption of pale butter in eastern markets is of vital importance.

Rubber Beats Steel

Rubber tires have scored another victory over steel in tests made by 14 experiment stations and summarized by the United States Department of Agriculture. The score was "96 per cent in favor of low-pressure pneumatic tires over steel tires for wheel tractors of the general-purpose type in the performance of numerous routine draft operations of the average farm under favorable soil conditions." The states ranged from California to Ohio and from Michigan to Texas. The rubber-tired tractors pulled better and saved fuel. They did not perform well, without chains, in mud or wet soil. It was found better to have a pressure of only 16 pounds in rear tires, while 20 pounds worked best for front wheels. Estimates place number of rubber-tired tractors in use in United States at more than a million.—The Country Home.

Water in Grain and Hay

Water constitutes a higher percentage of both grain and roughage than is commonly realized. Best grades of mature, well cured corn, wheat, oats, barley and rye all contain approximately 10 per cent water, while lower grades of new corn frequently carry as much as 20 per cent or over. This means, says the Rural New-Yorker, that on at least one out of every ten cars of corn shipped we are paying freight for a carload of water; well-cured hay, straw and fodder also contain an average of about 10 per cent water, while fresh green roughage and grass average about 70 per cent, and in many instances considerably higher. Corn silage from well-matured corn has an average content of over 70 per cent moisture, while roots average nearer 80 per cent.

Purebred Live Stock

There is only one justification for purebred live stock. That is to improve commercial flocks to better meet consumptive needs. So far as sheep are concerned there is a dual objective, mutton and wool. There is opportunity here then to breed animals specializing in either carcass or fleece and also for animals combining, so far as possible, these two objectives. Variation in type by purebred breeders can only be commended when such variations are made with the view of more nearly meeting present or future market requirements.—The Sheep Breeder.

What a Baby Thinks

A baby doesn't understand why when he is kissed. However, a baby thinks nearly everything in the world is inexplicable.

HOSPITALS OF U. S. A. REGISTER PATIENT EVERY 4 SECONDS

A parade of 7,709,942 patients—one every four seconds throughout the year—was admitted to the nation's 6,246 registered hospitals in 1935, the American Medical association reported.

In its annual census of hospital data the association's council on medical education and hospitals said 1935 saw fewer hospitals, increased capacity and increased occupancy. In 1934 a total of 6,334 hospitals were operated.

The capacity of all registered hospitals, said the report, was 1,076,350 beds and 53,380 bassinets (baskets or cradles for infants), a gain for the year of 28,249 beds and 281 bassinets.

The number of patients admitted during 1935 was 562,526 greater than in the previous year and did not include 769,660 babies born in hospitals in 1935, making the total larger by 68,517 than the 1934 figure.

The council reported that the average stay for the 6,867,870 patients admitted to the country's 4,257 general hospitals was 14 days, making a total of 95,372,310 patient days, or 29.8 per cent of the 319,991,485 patient days spent by all patients in all hospitals.

In spite of these huge totals the average number of idle beds was 199,661, of which 144,880 were in general hospitals. The average daily census of patients in all registered hospitals was 876,689, a gain of 46,591.

Based on the country's 1935 population as given by the United States bureau of the census, it was estimated that one person in 15 was a hospital bed patient in 1935.

Alabama To Build Cotton Highways

$1,300,000 APPROPRIATED FOR 150 MILES OF NEW TYPE ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Montgomery, Ala., April 20.—The Alabama Highway Commission Monday submitted to the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads a special program calling for paving 150 miles of highway with bituminous surfacing, using cotton fabric as a reinforcing agency.

An allotment of $1,300,000 has been made to Alabama by the federal government to finance the program and literally hundreds of thousands of yards of cotton fabric are to be used, engineers said.

Extensive research will be made cooperatively by the Bureau of Public Roads and the Highway Commission in order that a comprehensive and detailed history of the entire experiment may be compiled. Pending approval by the bureau, the tentative location of the projects was not released.

Highway engineers explained the cotton process thusly:

The first layer of bituminous surfacing is placed on top of the roadbase, and while still soft, the cotton cloth or fabric is spread on the surface. When it has cooled sufficiently, another layer of bituminous surfacing is placed on the fabric, and then the final surface is laid.

Advocates of the cotton paving claim that its use not only reinforces the bituminous surfacng but prevents it from cracking and improves its resistance to water.

Coarse, unbleached cotton cloth in three weights will be tested to determine the best weight. The first will weigh 5.3 ounces per sq. yard, the second 4.25 ounces and the last three ounces.

A talk on temperance was given by Dr. Fred B. Pearson. An interesting report of the recent convention held in Bessemer was given by Rev. Woolley. The banner was awarded to Shelby and the efficiency pin was given to Calera. The next meeting will be held at Vincent, July 3rd.

Those from here that attended were: Mesdames F. H. Frost, M. L. Hare, C. L. Meroney, Ainsworth, A. J. Bridges, T. A. Johnson, Mattie Hubbard, Reece Woolley, H. C. Langston, Beatrice Phagan and Dr. Pearson.

Folk Festival, Palmer Hall, Saturday Night

A Folk Festival in which every Elementary School child will take an active part, will be presented Saturday night, April 25 at 7:15 in Palmer Hall. The music and the physical education student teachers with the assistance of Miss Weir, Miss Harris, Mrs. Peterson, Miss Jones, Miss Wells, Miss Rice, Miss Hood, Miss Nathews, Miss Dillworth, Miss Boyd, Miss Farrah and Miss Schneider are directing the festival.

Come To Montevallo For The Big Event Saturday

Would you come to Montevallo next Saturday if someone told you right where you might pick up fifty dollars out of a pig track?

Well, we know you would. And we are saying to you: Come on to town, for that is exactly what may happen.

However there are not any pig tracks in Montevallo, as we know of exactly; but the fifty dollars is here, and you can find out where it is, and how you may be able to pick it up and walk away as happy as the pig that made the track, if he were a dead pig in the sunshine.

The merchants and business houses of Montevallo are cooperating in this event with a purpose to induce more people to come to Montevallo to do their trading. They want to prove to every person in this trade territory that Montevallo is as good a place to buy as any of the nearby places.

You have doubtless seen one of the big circulars explaining this proposition in detail. It contains a list of the merchants who are cooperating in it. When you want to buy something, go to one of the places named, and ask the merchant about the trade tickets he will give you.

Get the habit of coming to Montevallo. We have good merchants and good stores. They will give you good service, and will appreciate your trade. When you get started to coming to Montevallo, we believe you will keep it up.

And by all means be here on next Saturday, April 25, at 1:30 p.m., when "Senator" Bob Reid takes the loud speaker and announces the result of the first Big Event Day. A second one of the same kind will be two weeks later, Saturday, May 9.

THREE COLLEGE PRESIDENTS WILL CONSIDER LEASE NEXT SATURDAY

Montgomery, Ala., April 20. — Presidents of Alabama's three colleges will meet Saturday in Birmingham to give final consideration to three bids to lease Radio Station WAPI at Birmingham for 15 years.

Bids to lease the state-owned station were opened here Monday by Gov. Graves, Dr. George H. Denny, president of Alabama, Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of Auburn and Dr. A. F. Harman, president of Montevallo, and all but three eliminated from consideration.

These bids were submitted, Gov. Graves said, by James C. Hanrahan, of Knoxville, Tenn., representing the Scripps-Howard interests; Gordon Persons, of Montgomery, and Ed Norton, of Birmingham.

The three presidents will meet again Saturday and report their findings to Graves later for a final award.

The station, operated on 5,000 watts, is now leased at $775 monthly by Bascom Hopson, of Birmingham, who did not submit a bid.

In asking bids, the executive board asked for alternate bids in the event the station's petition for a 50,000-watt station is granted by the Federal Communications Commission in Washington.

Gov. Graves announced that Ben Leader, Birmingham attorney, has submtited a bid, and that Victor Hanson, publisher of The News and The Age-Herald, submitted "a communication, but not an actual bid."

No details of any of the bids were made public in view of the meeting Saturday.

Dean and Mrs. Napier Entertain For Seniors

Dean and Mrs. T. H. Napier entertained Saturday afternoon with a tea at their home in honor of the senior class at Alabama College. Receiving with them was Miss Beeler Napier.

Officials of the college present included Dr. and Mrs. A. F. Harman, Mrs. Mary M. McCoy, Dr. Minnie L. Steckel, Mrs. Louise Coleman, Mrs. Mary E. Harris, Mrs. Nora Reynolds, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Wills, Dr. Willena Peck, Miss Anna Irvin, Miss Charlotte Claybrooke, Dr. Imogene Moore, Miss Elizabeth Stockton, Miss Alexina Demouy, Miss Alice Boyd.

The senior class colors of red and white were carried out in refreshments and decorations, the latter consisting of roses and sweet peas. One hundred thirty-four seniors called during the afternoon.

Foshee-Burnett Marriage

A wedding of much interest to the many friends of both Montevallo and Clanton was that of Miss Carrie Foshee and Mr. Arthur Burnett. The marriage took place on Friday evening at the home of Dr. A. E. Middlebrooks, of Clanton, with only close friends present.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. D. Foshee of Clanton. She is a graduate of Chilton County High School. Mr. Burnett is the son of H. M. Burnett. Formerly of Clanton, he is now holding a responsible position with the Hayes Motor Co. here.

After a short wedding trip the young couple were entertained with a dinner Sunday evening by the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Burnett. Those included in this affair were: Mr. and Mrs. O. K. McSwain, Mr. and Mrs. K. M. Vinson and children, and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Burnett and children.

Rural Schools The Sufferers

Montgomery, Ala., April 20. — Dr. R. L. Johns, director of administration of the State Department of Education, said Monday night that the final record of the 1935-36 school year would show that more than 50 counties operated elementary schools only 5 and three fourths months and high schools from 7 and three-fourths to 8 months due to inadequate funds.

A majority of city high schools, he said, will complete their normal terms through donations made by city councils after school funds had been exhausted.

Children in rural areas suffered the greatest, he said, because in some counties the elementary schools were operated on donated funds, but no school bus service was included. This forced the rural chidren to remain at home, he siad, while their city cousins were able to attend school because they were not affected by the transportation problem.

Illinois Primary Results Interesting and Significant—New Tax Bill Drafted—President Roosevelt Favors Flood Control Projects.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

ILLINOIS' primary held the center of political interest, for it not only provided lively state battles but also was of considerable moment nationally. Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and Senator Borah of Idaho, who was born in Illinois, were the contestants for the Republican Presidential preferential vote, and the former came out with 31 delegates against 26 for Borah. The senator's friends were elated, because, without organization, he carried a large part of the state outside of Chicago. This preferential vote is purely advisory and neither man has a slate of delegates to the national convention. The result makes it certain that Knox will make a respectable showing on the first roll call. It also adds to Borah's prestige and aids him in the coming Ohio primary.

Frank Knox

Gov. Henry Horner, seeking renomination, was victorious in the bitter fight with the regular Democratic organization and the Kelly-Nash machine in Chicago, which had thrown him overboard and supported Bundesen for governor. The Democrats almost unanimously voted for the renomination of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, and the Republicans named former Senator Otis Glenn to oppose him in November.

Republican leaders in Washington were encouraged to believe the internecine warfare in the Democratic ranks would help the Republicans to carry the state. The Democratic sages, on the other hand, liked the showing of strength made by Borah, feeling his liberal following might switch to Roosevelt in November if the G. O. P. puts up a conservative candidate.

In Nebraska's primary only Borah's name was printed on the Republican preferential ballot, but about one-sixth of the voters wrote in the name of Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas.

For the Democratic preference President Roosevelt was unopposed in both Illinois and Nebraska.

DEFEATING the opposition by President Roosevelt's supporters, the state Democratic executive committee of Georgia ordered a Presidential preferential primary on June 3 and fixed the entrance fee for each candidate at $10,000.

"The New Deal has plenty of money to pay for a primary in Georgia, and I am in favor of letting them do it," said Will Mann, close personal and political friend of Gov. Eugene Talmadge, administration foe.

The governor was asked directly whether he would oppose President Roosevelt in the primary.

"I don't know," he answered. "I am pretty busy with state affairs right now. It depends on how things shape up in the state."

HAVING discarded the President's suggestion of temporary processing taxes, Chairman Sam B. Hill's house subcommittee completed its draft of the new tax bill. It calls for a new type of corporation levy, ranging from 1 per cent to 29.7 per cent for corporations with net income up to $10,000, and from 4 to 42½ per cent for corporations with net income over $10,000, depending on the amount of earnings that are not distributed. Preferential tax treatment is given to banks and insurance companies, to debt-ridden companies, to companies in receivership, and a new system of taxing non-resident aliens is created.

Sam B. Hill

Railroads will continue to have the right to file consolidated returns but the committee refused to accept the petition of R. V. Fletcher, general counsel for the Association of American Railroads, that railroads as a segregated group of industry, be given a variety of special deductions in computing taxable net income.

IN HIS press conference President Roosevelt said government departments are concentrating on flood control problems and that if congress would pass a bill appropriating a billion dollars for that purpose he would sign it, provided the measure put men to work immediately.

Mr. Roosevelt said the Passamaquoddy project in Maine and Florida ship canal were eliminated because of the recent refusal of congress to make appropriations for continuance of the work. He said he did not contemplate doling out relief funds for the projects and that there would be no funds for the projects unless congress reversed its refusal.

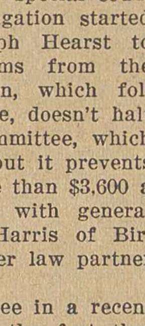
On the same day the United States Chamber of Commerce issued a warning against encroachment of the federal government on flood control projects which are the primary responsibility of the states.

The committee also objected to the New Deal policy of expending large sums for dams to develop hydro-electric power and declared that the administration should follow a well-balanced program having as its foremost purpose the control of floods.

BY A vote of 153 to 137 the house rejected a resolution to permit Senator Black's lobby committee to pay $10,000 to special counsel in injunction litigation started by William Randolph Hearst to protect his telegrams from the probers. This action, which followed a bitter debate, doesn't halt the work of the committee, which has its own funds, but it prevents the payment of more than $3,600 a year, in accordance with general law, to Crampton Harris of Birmingham, Ala., former law partner of Chairman Black.

The lobby committee in a recent session brought out the fact that some wealthy men who are backers of the American Liberty league also have contributed to the Southern Committee to Uphold the Constitution, though what this has to do with lobbying was not quite clear. The Southern committee, which is headed by John Henry Kirby of Houston, Texas, is opposed to some of the New Deal doings.

SUDDEN death, due to a coronary thrombosis, came to James M. Beck at his residence in Washington, and all informed Americans mourn the demise of this public spirited citizen and eminent authority on constitutional law. Though he was a sturdy and conscientious opponent of the present national administration, leading officials in Washington united with the Republicans in declaring that in his death the nation had sustained a great loss.



J. M. Beck

Mr. Beck was not only one of the foremost lawyers of America but for more than three decades was a public man of distinction, holding numerous offices at Washington, and an influential place in the counsels of the Republican party. Born in Philadelphia in 1861, he first held office as United States attorney for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, as a Democrat. He left that party on the silver issue and was made an assistant attorney general by President McKinley.

Richard Yates, former governor of Illinois and former congressman, died in Springfield at the age of seventy-five years. The son of the Civil war governor of the state, Mr. Yates was for many years a picturesque figure in Illinois politics and an influential member of the Republican party.

MUSSOLINI'S armies in Ethiopia occupied Dessye, an important military base, and captured vast stores of war materials. Marshal Badoglio at once started an expeditionary force along the excellent road from there to Addis Ababa, and it was believed the capital city would be captured within a few days.

Stiffened by military successes in Africa, the Italian delegation went to Geneva for peace conversations, prepared to demand a peace on Italy's terms, including virtual Italian control of the entire empire of Haile Selassie. Settlement of the matter within the framework of the League of Nations seemed remote if not impossible.

PLANS for mutual defense in case Germany attacks France or Belgium were studied by the general staffs of Great Britain, France and Belgium at a meeting in London. High officers of the armies, navies and air forces were present, with experts to assist them.

It was understood that a major feature of the plan would be to reply to any German attack with a terrific aerial bombardment by massed fleets on German industrial centers, railways, army headquarters, airdromes and seaports.

It was clear that the relatively small British professional army could not give a great deal of help against German aggression, and that Britain's effective aid would be rendered by her navy, which could easily seize control of the North sea and the channel, and her steadily increasing air forces.

WITH appropriate ceremony the cornerstone of the new Interior department building in Washington was laid, the President handling the trowel. The structure, the second largest government office building there, is to be completed in December. It covers five and one-half acres and will provide 700,000 square feet of usable floor space. It will cost $12,000,000, about $5,000,000 less than the capital's largest, the Commerce department building.

The trowel used by Mr. Roosevelt was the one employed by George Washington in laying the cornerstone of the Capitol in 1793.

ABOUT six hundred men and women, members of the recently organized Unemployed Workers' Alliance, staged a big parade of "hunger marchers" in Washington, shouting demands, singing and waving banners. They sought to present a petition to President Roosevelt in the White House but the best they could do was to obtain an audience from Secretary Marvin McIntyre for a delegation headed by David Lasser, president of the alliance.

Vice Pres. Garner

Lasser declared after spending 30 minutes with the President's secretary: "Mr. McIntyre gave us a lot of nice words, but nothing substantial. If nothing is done to give these people jobs there will be a hunger march on Washington next summer in which hundreds of thousands will take part. We are tired of Mr. Roosevelt's promissory notes."

Lasser and his delegation also called on Vice President Garner at the Capitol and got even less satisfaction from him.

"The jobless feel that we have been sold out by the Democratic party," Lasser declared, in presenting his petition.

"I resent that," snapped the Vice President, reddening. "I have been in politics for 40 years and I don't think anybody has ever been sold out by the party."

The marchers carried banners and placards with such inscriptions as: "Give the bankers home relief; we want jobs!" "Slaves will not be killed," "We demand employment insurance," "Pass the Marcantonio bill," this being a 6 billion-dollar relief bill introduced by the New York city representative.

PLUTARCO ELIAS CALLES, former president of Mexico and for long the most powerful figure in that republic, was forcibly exiled to the United States, together with three other once prominent citizens, by the Mexican government, which declared their presence there was dangerous to the welfare of the country.

Summarily ousted with Calles, who for 11 years ruled Mexico with an iron hand, were Luis Morones, former minister of labor and leader of the regional confederation of workers and peasants; Luis de Leon, former minister of the interior and agriculture; and Rafael Melchor Ortega, former governor of Guanajuato.

The four men were, by order of President Cardenas, placed aboard a plane at Mexico City and taken across the border to Brownsville, Texas. From there they took another plane to California.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, accompanied by Mrs. Roosevelt, attended Easter services at St. Thomas Episcopal church, after the First Lady had witnessed the Knights Templar sunrise service at the Arlington amphitheater. Next day the President went to Baltimore where he addressed the Maryland Young Democratic clubs.

Mr. Roosevelt accepted an invitation to speak before the annual convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution which opens in Washington April 20. He also will deliver an address on April 25 at the Jefferson banquet of the National Democratic club in New York.

FOLLOWING a conference with Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood, who was removed from command of the Eighth corps area for criticizing WPA methods, President Roosevelt took the soldier back into his good graces and appointed him to the command of the Sixth corps area with headquarters in Chicago. He will replace Maj. Gen. Frank McCoy and the assignment takes effect May 2. General McCoy is transferred to the Second corps area at New York to succeed Maj. Gen. Dennis E. Nolan, who is retiring.

SOMETHING new in Spanish history took place in Madrid. The parliament, by a vote of 238 to 5, ousted Niceto Alcala Zamora from the office of president of the republic. This action, accomplished by a coalition of Socialists, Communists, Left Republicans and ten minor groups, was taken on a Socialist motion that the president had acted illegally in dissolving the last parliament before the elections and that therefore he should be expelled from office. Back of this motion, however, lay radical sentiment that Zamora, in using his power according to personal whim, has hampered the progress of the "republican revolution."

Diego Martinez Barrio, speaker of parliament, was made temporary president to serve until elections are held.

Memory Lingers On

Washington.—It has been several months since the administration farm relief program, the agricultural adjustment act, was declared dead, but like the words of the song, "the memory lingers on." And it is quite apparent that mistakes as well as memories of the AAA will continue through the heat of the coming Presidential campaign and probably considerably longer, for it is only necessary to recall that the stepbrother of the AAA, the federal farm board of the Hoover administration, still is the butt of much criticism and many pointed paragraphs.

One of the main reasons why the memories linger on, where those memories involve AAA, is Michigan's Republican Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg. Senator Vandenberg never did get enthusiastic about the merits of AAA as they were expounded by Secretary Wallace, Administrator Chester Davis and other New Deal spokesmen, and when the Supreme court of the United States threw out the processing taxes upon which the law was predicated, Senator Vandenberg was in a delightful spot from a political standpoint. He has not found it necessary to say "I told you so" and has had, I imagine, a great deal of personal fun in simply hinting to or reminding others of his previous stand.

But it was not until the Michigan senator began pulling figures out of his senatorial hat, showing how benefit payments from the AAA had gone to great and wealthy corporations in sums as high as a million dollars or more, that he held a key to the New Deal skeleton closet. They know now, however, exactly what he meant when he announced in the senate several weeks ago that no such plan as the AAA could be administered without vast sums being distributed in what he termed unwarranted payments—unwarranted from the standpoint of help for the smaller farmers.

Secretary Wallace stalled off Senator Vandenberg's demand in the senate for a complete list of beneficiaries who received checks from AAA in excess of one thousand dollars for quite a while, but there were too many senators who believed as Senator Vandenberg did, that the truth ought to be known. Of course, as the procedure usually goes in Washington, many things are done without actual force being used. It was thus in the case of the AAA payments. Democratic senators who foresaw their inability to prevent a senate vote demanding a list of AAA payments persuaded Mr. Wallace to make public the list voluntarily and it was done just in advance of senate action. So, we now have for the first time, at least, an indication of the grotesque results of the agricultural adustment administration program that was hailed from the Atlantic to the Pacific as an ideal plan.

Dynamite in It

The dynamite in the situation lies in the fact that there were dozens, even hundreds, of corporations which received AAA checks among the big bounties paid to induce curtailment of basic forage crops. This would not be so bad except for the fact that the brilliant planners of the AAA continuously stressed its value to the small, debt ridden farmers. Throughout the time the law was under consideration and through the two years of its operation, never did Mr. Wallace or Mr. Davis fail to point out in their numerous speeches how great sums of money, collected in processing taxes, were being distributed to thousands of farmers and that these payments were in time going to put agriculture on its collective feet.

Now, however, the truth of their statement has been proved, but when the whole truth has been exposed on the floor of the senate, it was found to go far beyond the small, debt ridden farmers.

The whole truth disclosed, in fact, that several million dollars had been paid even to corporations chartered by the British government and with home offices in England. Wall Street, that home of "entrenched greed," received its share, and its share was substantial. On top of all of this there lately has come a disclosure that a great wheat farmer in Montana received something like $50,000 for agreeing not to plant wheat on land which he had rented from the Indians through the Federal Department of the Interior for the specific purpose of raising wheat.

The list of huge benefit payments is much too large to include in this letter, but the fact remains that it showed how even the best laid plans of mice and men aft go astray, even when those men are brilliant brain trusters who themselves claim to know all there is available for human understanding. Beyond that, the Vandenberg disclosures have set in motion discussion that will come pretty close to continuing into every farmhouse in the land. Unless I miss my guess, and I am no Doctor Tugwell, thousands of farmers are going to bitterly resent the fact that their payments were small, whereas gigantic corporations received sums ranging from ten to a thousand times as large.

Unfair Criticism

In behalf of the AAA officials, it must be said that there will be as, indeed there has been already, considerable unfair criticism. The criticism to which I refer is of this type: that they should have discovered in advance of the payments that funds were going to these corporations. Assuming that they could have discovered that fact in advance, there was no alternative for them except to pay the checks authorized by law. Congress made the law, or rather, congress passed it under the lash of the administration, but it was on the statute books and administrative officials are not supposed to disregard such provisions.

If there is to be criticism it should be directed at the initial framing of the statute that brought about the condition. The results that have attracted so much attention since Senator Vandenberg's exposure constitute one of the curious coincidences and queer quirks of planned economy.

And a further word about the criticism. A great many people are likely to forget that while their check was in three figures and some corporation received one in six figures, the condition results wholly from the fact that one owned more land than the other. You may properly say this should have been foreseen and I believe you will be making a correct statement. But surely this is a fact: the AAA officials cannot be blamed for sending out the checks when the law said they should do it regardless of the name or nature of the beneficiary. The fault lies solely and completely with those who, from their professional desks, conceived the whole scheme and gained President Roosevelt's approval of it.

Vulnerable Spots

The development of the vulnerable spots in the AAA crop curtailment program probably will prove beneficial to the country as a whole eventually. For one thing, these disclosures have forever choked off proposals of that kind. They may result as well in strengthening the new proposition for crop control through the medium of soil conservation. In other words, since the bulk of the congress thinks through legislation only in the terms of administration arguments, they will likely be less prone to enact legislation without knowing what results will be obtained.

It seems to me that the new farm-aid plan likely will be stronger and probably more workable and certainly less extravagant than was the AAA because the AAA weaknesses have been exposed. These exposures ought to have an effect also among thinking farmers who hereafter are unlikely to accept dogmatic statements and rainbow pictures painted for them by political demagogues and professional farm leaders without examining the practicability of the scheme.

Fletcher's Brain Trust

While we are talking about mistakes and about the results obtained by brilliant theorists, I hear more and more discussion of the latest move by Chairman Henry P. Fletcher and his Republican national committee. Mr. Fletcher has hired ten university professors to head up what he calls the committee's research staff and in announcing their appointment he stressed a declaration that "the division is not a brain trust." But "brain trust" it is going to be called notwithstanding Mr. Fletcher's assertion that they were practical men and women of experience. They are going to be a brain trust in exactly the same sense that Mr. Roosevelt's "brain trust" has been denominated. And how else could it be? There actually seems to be little choice between the type of men Mr. Fletcher has chosen and the Tugwells, Hopkinses and other doctors and professors who have constantly had the ear of the President. These men will have Mr. Fletcher's ear and undoubtedly will pour into it their own theories of government and their own ideas of approach to the problem that confronts the Republican national committe, namely, the defeat of Mr. Roosevelt.

I have observed political battles for a good many years and I have observed the management of governmental responsibilities through a parallel period. The conclusion is inescapable, as far as I am concerned, that practical men always have done a better job, always have been better administrators and better planners, than the men and women who have spent their lives lecturing from a university classroom rostrum.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, a likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter for his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. On the way to Montauk, where he intended to disappear, he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss.

Well, something had happened. Something that would end that old woman's efforts to make it up with the boy's father; something that might well be the end of them both.

"Why did your husband kill Boss Kelly?"

"He didn't."

"You said—"

"I said, 'That's what John Clarke Ridder did.' Well, that's what they say he did, and it isn't going to make much difference whether he did it or not."

"But you don't think he did it."

"I know he didn't. He had reason enough, and he's done a lot of crazy things, but Jack wouldn't hurt a fly."

"Why did you come out here?"

"For help."

"Well," the Duke said, "maybe I can help you. God knows I'd like to. Anyway, let's see where we stand."

He crossed the room, and crossed the room, and sat opposite her, on a little library chair.

"Go on," he urged. "What's your name?"

"What's yours? Your real name?"

"Barry Gilbert. I'm a bum. I took shelter in this house, one rainy night a couple of weeks ago, and everybody thought I was young Ridder, so I left 'em think so. That's my story. What's yours?"

She actually smiled.

"You've got your nerve," she observed. "Well, that's what we need now. My name's Peggy O'Day."

"Actorine?"

"Sort of. I was a chorus girl in 'Blossom Time' when I met Jack in Florida. He was a bum, too. Living under a fake name. We still live under that. Jay Rogers. Everybody calls him 'Jack.' The old man paid him fifty dollars a week for not using his name. We've got a little boy, now, and he doesn't even know his name's Ridder. He thinks he's Jay Rogers, Jr. The old man doesn't know what name he took, and he doesn't care."

Everything about the girl was a contradiction, the Duke thought. Hard, and yet soft, with her steely eyes, and her quivering lips. A chorus girl who believed in her husband, and came an hundred miles through the night to help him. A philosopher, the Duke, as we have seen, and he found himself musing, "Is anyone black or white? Aren't we all contradictions—kind of a dirty gray?"

"Go on," he said.

"Well, Jack was getting his fifty from the old man's lawyer—when I met him. We were playing West Palm Beach, and he followed me to Miami. Hadn't anything else to do. He was drinking all the time, and I knew he'd never quit until he had to. 'I'll marry you,' I told him, 'but not while you're loafing around on money you get from a guy that's ashamed of you. 'I want a home,' I said, 'and a husband I can respect. You get a job, and I'll marry you.'"

"Did he?"

"Yes, he did, and I married him. That week. It was a good job, too—night clerk in a big hotel at Palm Beach. After that, we let the fifty lay in the post office. Jack didn't want to, at first, but I said, 'We're going to make Jay Rogers mean something, and then we're going back and talk turkey to the old man.' We had a swell little home, and the kid came, and he's swell, too. And then, all at once, the boom busted right in our face, and the hotel closed, and we beat it back to New York. Say, what am I telling you this for?"

"Go on."

"Well, the next chapter's the same old story. No money. No job. Tramping the street, looking for work. Know what that's like?"

"I invented it," said the Duke.

"Well, then, you know. Things kept happening. The boy got sick, and the people we rented the room from threatened to put us out, and I guess Jack couldn't stand it. So he went to see his mother—without telling me. He didn't tell her about me, either.

"The old lady gave him a hundred bucks, and invited him down here. I don't know what else happened, because I was so mad he didn't dare tell me. Proud? Well, partly, but I guess the truth is I was scared they'd separate us. Anyway, I made him send the money back. 'What're we going to do?' he said. 'Let the kid starve? I can't get work.' 'No,' I answered, 'but maybe I can.'

"Well, there wasn't an Aborn show in town. Or any other regular show that wanted me. So last Monday I landed in a joint, called The Cocoanut Bar. One of those places where you get a ten-course dinner and a revue for two dollars, and both of 'em rotten. Salad without dressing, and you don't care because the show girls are the same way. Tough spot—The Cocoanut Bar—but I wasn't choosey last Monday."

"So, then, Jack was mad."

"Plenty. He'd been promised a place as elevator man in Brooklyn, but we couldn't wait for that. You can be as straight in a cabaret as you can in a convent, if you want to be. Oh, well—last night, Mike Kelly came in. About eight o'clock. With two strong-arm guys. I knew him right away, because he was five weeks at the hotel where Jack worked in Palm Beach. And he sat down, and sent for the boss—Luis Morano, the boss is—and they had a stiff pow-wow. Morano was sore all through when he came back where the dressing rooms are. And then we swung into a number, called 'Tickle Me.' The girls go up to the men, in that number, and paw 'em a good deal. And, in the middle of this pawing, Kelly jumps up, and yells that I've tried to pick his pocket. I'd really just got to him, as another girl left, but he grabbed my arm, and shouted so you could have heard him in Harlem. Luis ran over, and the bouncer brought a cop, and a crowd gathered.

"Kelly'd been drinking a lot. 'You can't get away with that!' he kept yelling at Morano. 'I'll send this girl to the island, and you to the hot-spot! You watch me!'

"'I got nothing to do with it,' Luis answered. 'I don't even know this girl. She only came Monday. Isn't that right, boys?'

"Well, the end of it was that I walked out with the cop. I'd've been in the lock-up yet, only there was a decent young fellow on the desk at the station house. He let met go on my promise to return if I was wanted, there being no one there to sign the complaint."

While she talked, the Duke was thinking.

Astonishing things had happened, and went on happening. Were astonishing things always happening, everywhere? And did they come about as quietly as this; as much as though they were the commonplaces of daily routine?

"You've walked into a pretty mess," the girl had said. But, after all it wasn't his mess. So far as he was concerned, the game was up.

He had made full and complete confession to this girl, without a moment's hesitation. Firstly, because the game was up, anyway, and, secondly, because it had seemed the right moment for laying cards on the table. He had asked to see her hand, and he couldn't expect to do that without showing his own. Without inspiring her confidence.

Why did he want to inspire her confidence? What was her story to him? Why should he care what happened to a woman he had never seen—in Bad Nauheim? But, damn it, he had seen her! He had seen into her mind and heart, which is a good deal more than looking at a face, or a black satin dress. Her life would be over with this. And the old man's. "The doctor says any shock might prove serious. One false step on your part, if he knew, would end everything forever. And he would know. Ill as he is, he still has his newspaper sent him, and he still reads every word."

The Duke felt sorry for these young people, too,—for that foolish young husband who "wouldn't hurt a fly," and for this painted, hard-soft young wife and mother, who had wanted a home and a man she could respect.

Patricia? Well, that hurt. He had known it would. He had known, from that first day, that he cared a lot for this girl who needed a spanking, but he had known, too, that his caring wasn't going to come to anything. Even if his luck had held, you couldn't marry a girl like that, and then have her find out that you were "a bum." An imposter. It didn't matter now. What mattered now was whether this boy had killed Mike Kelly. And, if he hadn't, whether it was "going to make much difference" — with all the Boss' cohorts arrayed against him. And, anyway, how the whole business was to be kept — for a while, at least—from the woman who was "counting the days" to his letter at Nauheim.

"You've got your nerve," Peggy O'Day had said. "Well, that's what we need now." And, as he listened, Barry was more and more compelled to agree with her.

* * * * * * * *

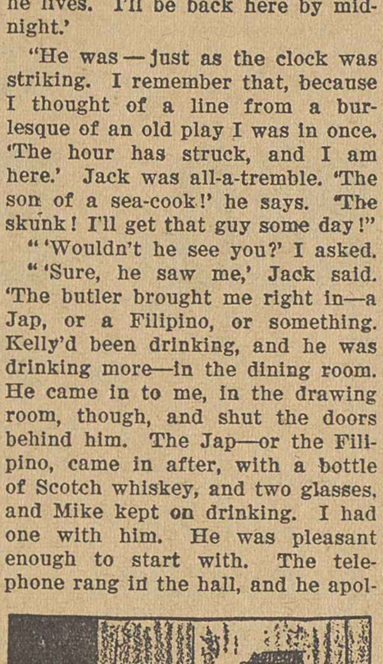
"We got home around half past ten o'clock," the girl had been saying, "and Jack was wild when he saw the cop, and heard the story. 'I'll be back for you tomorrow,' the cop said, 'and you'd better be here. This department takes its orders from Mike Kelly, and don't you forget that.'

"'I'm going to see Mike Kelly,' Jack says. 'I knew him pretty well in Palm Beach. And I know where he lives. I'll be back here by midnight.'

"He was — just as the clock was striking. I remember that, because I thought of a line from a burlesque of an old play I was in once. 'The hour has struck, and I am here.' Jack was all-a-tremble. 'The son of a sea-cook!' he says. 'The skunk! I'll get that guy some day!'

"'Wouldn't he see you?' I asked.

"'Sure, he saw me,' Jack said. 'The butler brought me right in—a Jap, or a Filipino, or something. Kelly'd been drinking, and he was drinking more—in the dining room. He came in to me, in the drawing room, though, and shut the doors behind him. The Jap—or the Filipino, came in after, with a bottle of Scotch whiskey, and two glasses, and Mike kept on drinking. I had one with him. He was pleasant enough to start with. The telephone rang in the hall, and he apologized for going out to answer it. When he came back, '"You'll have to make it snappy,"' he says. '"I've got an important conference here in a few minutes."'



"Because I Can Help You, and I'm Going To."

"'So then I told him about you, and he went nutty.

"'"She's a damned little thief!" he yelled.

"'"She's my wife," I answered.

"'"Your wife!" he said, "Yes, and I guess anybody's wife that wants her!"

"'"Don't say that," I asked him.

"'"I'll say anything I damn please!" he shouted. "Who the hell are you, telling me what to say? A guy living off a girl at Spanish Luis Morano's! Well, I don't give a damn who you live off, but when Luis sics 'em on to lifting stuff out o' my pocket, they got the wrong bird! This dame's going to jail tomorrow, and I'm going to headquarters myself to be sure she goes! Now, get out!" he says.'

"Well, of course, Jack loses his temper. They yelled at each other a few minutes, and then Jack says he calmed down. '"Listen,"' he says, as quietly as I'm talking now. '"I don't amount to much, and I guess I know it as well as you do. But you let up on my wife, or I'll never let up on you as long as I live—so help me!"'

"And, with that, he flounces out of the house.

"'Did you bang the door?' I asked, trying to make him laugh.

"'I banged both of 'em,' he answered. 'The door from the drawing room into the hall, and the front door. I mean what I said, too. If you're arrested tomorrow—'"

She paused for a moment, and slumped back into her chair, as though completely exhausted.

"You'll find the rest in the paper," she concluded. "The cops picked him up about three o'clock this afternoon. He thought they'd come for me, first, and he said a few things about Kelly that aren't going to help much. I don't know yet why they didn't pick me up, too. Anyway, when they'd gone, I did a whole lot of thinking. And I decided this wasn't a good minute for pride, or anything. 'If they're going to separate us,' I said, 'why, they're going to, and that's that.' So I took a chance, and the first train I could get after I'd found somebody to look after the boy. When the butler told me Mr. Ridder'd be home around midnight, I figured my luck had changed. Of course, I never thought of a fake Ridder."

There was no ill-will in her tone; only a faint amusement, succeeded, almost immediately, by desperate earnestness.

"Well, that's my story," she said. "God only knows why I told you. I came here to tell it because I didn't think even that tough old bird would want to see his boy sent up for murder. Now—what do we do? Cable? I haven't got money enough; have you? I haven't got a lawyer, or a dollar to hire one. I haven't got a relative that I know about, or a friend in the world. Just a sick kid at home, and a fellow I'm kind of strong for locked up in the Tombs."

She had asked, "What do we do?" "I haven't got money enough; have you?" Taken him into partnership; that's what she had. Into one of those natural, inevitable partnerships of people who have no one to whom they have the right to turn; the kinship of the poor, and despised, and outcast.

"I know a great lawyer," said the Duke. "A great criminal lawyer. I met him tonight. A fellow named Winslow."

"Not Peter Winslow?"

The Duke nodded.

"Yes, he's great enough, but he'd never take my case."

"He might take mine," the Duke mused, aloud. "We struck up quite a friendship. He offered to get me a job. Of course, that's all off, because—"

"Because why?"

"Because he isn't going to do anything for me when he finds I'm a fake. Nobody is, when they know I'm not John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

The Duke rose, slowly, and walked across the room.

He was thinking hard.

"Nobody is," he repeated, still more slowly, as he returned to the chair in which was sitting the wife of the real "Jack" Ridder. "But why should they find out now?"

The girl looked at him, wide-eyed.

"I don't get you."

"It's easy," he answered, still slowly, and very deliberately. "People don't do anything for fakes, or cast-offs accused of murder. They won't do anything for the real John Ridder, because he's broke and in disgrace. But they might do a lot for the fake John Ridder—if they didn't know he was a fake."

"I guess I'm dumb," Peggy said, "but still I don't get you."

"Listen."

He resumed his seat in the small chair opposite her.

"You came out to get old John Clarke to help you."

"Yes."

"And he wasn't here."

"No."

"That was a lucky break for you, because, if he'd been here, he'd've had you chucked right out of the front door. Think, kid! He hasn't spoken to his son for years. Paid him fifty dollars a week not to use the family name. And then a cabaret girl turns up to say she's married the boy, and he committed murder—or was accused of it—because somebody caught her picking pockets in a night-club."

"It doesn't sound good—the way you put it."

"That's nothing to the way he'd put it. But he's not here. And that's not the best of your luck. The best of your luck is that I am."

"Why?"

"Because I can help you, and I'm going to. I am—if you'll let me. If you'll let me go on being John Clarke Ridder, Jr."

"Oh, that's the game, is it?"

"Listen. John Clarke Ridder, fake, can be the best friend John Clarke Ridder, real, ever had in his life. I can get Winslow to take your case, if he don't know I'm a fake. I can get Judge Hambidge to use his influence, and that's plenty. I can get money from home, because I'm making good. Look—read that!"

He darted across the room, and to the table drawer, returning with the letter from Mrs. Ridder.

"Read it quick! 'Any shock might prove serious. He must change his will.' And he still reads the papers. All right. What if he does read about a bum, named Jay Rogers, that married a night-club girl and is on trial for killing a Tammany boss. Jay Rogers don't mean a thing. But, if he reads that John Clarke Ridder, Jr., did all this, on top of everything else he's done, what's the answer?"

Castle on a Ship!

In sea stories there is often mention of the fo'c'sle. That word is, of course, short for forecastle. In the old days the fore part of a fighting ship was built in castle-like form, above the level of the ship. This castle overlooked the deck of enemy ships and also served to protect the soldiers. Today the old name is retained, though it is applied now to the fore part of the vessel under the deck where the sailors have their quarters.—Pearson's Weekly

No Perfect Crime
A Heavenly 400
Fighting Over Rivers

Arthur Brisbane

President Roosevelt in another "opening speech of the 1936 campaign," addressing 20,000 Young Democrats of Baltimore and the nation on the radio, suggested that youth should begin work at eighteen and "old age" stop work at sixty-five.

Youth should have its first 18 years, at least, for exercise, study, happiness. Sixty-five might be a good age to stop dull routine work for wages, but no man would want to stop real work until death, except that six months to look around this side of the grave might be acceptable. Goethe finished the second part of "Faust" when he was past seventy-two; and one of the ablest French writers, starting a new prose style, wrote nothing until at eighty-six he wrote the Life of St. Louis at the request of the king's widow. Within half a century 25 years have been added to the average lives of old men; nobody would want those years wasted.

In the murder of an unfortunate young woman, New York detectives think they see, at last, "the perfect crime," one in which the perpetrator cannot be identified.

Fortunately, there is no perfect crime except in the imagination of the criminal or the detective story writer, because criminals are dull, cannot keep their mouths shut, are vain, boast and the electric chair gets them. Also, they jump when a hand is laid on the shoulder; that helps detectives, and criminals are betrayed by fellow criminals.

Bishop Stewart, Episcopalian, of Chicago, thinks immortality may be limited. "Only those who have a definite relationship to God through the spiritual life may be eligible for immortality, and other souls cease to exist upon death."

This important suggestion of a celestial "four hundred" will appeal to many that might not care to meet, in heaven, the cave man with low forehead, protruding jaw, the bushman with a vocabulary of 150 words, or all the repentant thieves, murderers and trust magnates.

It is conceivable that selection of the celestial few might be postponed a few million years, until real civilization shall have begun. This is the poison gas age.

Rivers have played an important part in the world's history and in wars. The Tigris and Euphrates, creating fertile Mesopotamia, and the ancient Nile, with its rich valley, regularly coated with Nile mud, made the first civilizations possible.

Men fought through the ages about those two rivers, and today rivers still cause war. In Europe the Rhine border may cause a repetition of the big war. In Africa, the Blue Nile, fed by Ethiopia's Lake Tana, breeds bitter hatred between England and Italy.

Charles Lamb tells of a Chinese gentleman whose house burned and of a pig so marvelously roasted that thereafter pigs were locked in houses, the houses burned for the sake of the roast pig.

That is recalled by a lady under arrest in Pensacola, Fla. Sheriff Gandy charges she tried twice to wreck a passenger train to kill her husband, the engineer. It is alleged that the plot failed because the wrong spikes were pulled from the rails. Sheriff Gandy thinks the lady wanted to collect $3,000 in life insurance.

An African savage who gave all his ivory tusks for a gun was found later in the bush, on his knees, praying to the gun not to shoot him. He did not know how to use it.

This country is equally ignorant about using youth and its enthusiasm.

A Frenchman says truly "American digestion would improve if Americans made more and better sauces."

Voltaire, another Frenchman, said the same thing of England long ago. He found that England had many religions and only one sauce, whereas France had many sauces and only one religion, and he preferred France.

The new Zeppelin, in spite of engines out of order on her return from Brazil to Germany, kept on her way at 50 miles an hour, fighting winds over the Mediterranean. That is one advantage of a dirigible—she stays up. The heavier-than-air plane with engine trouble comes down.

All Around the House

You can't kill plant lice with a poison. You must dose them with some kind of liquid that will smother them to death. Kerosene emulsion or tobacco dust will do this.

Do not add dressing to a salad until just before salad is to be served. If salad greens are allowed to stand in dressing for any length of time, they will wilt.

Cold roast beef toughens if cooked for any length of time in hot gravy. It is better to heat gravy and pour over the meat when ready to serve.

When serving lettuce be sure that no water is on the leaves when french dressing is added. The water will spoil the dressing and the oil will not adhere to the lettuce. Do not put dressing on lettuce until it is to be served.

When papering a room cut off the left-hand selvage on rolls before you begin to paste. Leave right-hand selvage uncut. The overlapping method of papering is far easier than trying to place two edges together.

To make frosting adhere to a cake, dust a little flour over the top of the cake and you will have no difficulty in making the frosting stick.

Gelatin for fruit desserts should be whipped until the consistency of whipped cream, thick enough to prevent fruit settling to bottom of mold.

Indian Snake Charmer Uses a Mysterious Poison Herb

Kurbad Ali, an Indian, has a contract with a medical institute to supply them with cobras, the poison of which is used for experiments. To secure his victims he employs a mysterious herb used from time immemorial by Indian snake charmers. The herb exudes an odor which does not affect human beings, but temporarily stupefies snakes, rendering them harmless.

Prehistoric Bones Found in Southern California

Bits of bone have furnished scientists with evidence that man may have roamed southern California in the glacial epoch—nearly 25,000 years ago. Prehistoric remains of an imperial elephant, largest of all land mammals, and what appeared to be a human being were unearthed by WPA workers, digging 12 feet below the surface of the Slauson avenue drain, Los Angeles. In a closely assembled group were fragments of tusks, two teeth, and parts of a large vertebra. Near by were smaller bones, including a skull.

There are lots of things wrong with Alabama's government, and the only remedy in sight is to set up a new Constitution—rub the slate clean and start over again. If that were done, we believe the first article would make adequate provision for schools.

Everybody agrees that Alabama's schools should be properly financed. But if we want schools, why will we not be willing to find some plan of paying for them? If we can not have more taxes for the schools, then why not revamp the present system so we can have enough of the present revenue to take care of the schools?

The special session of Alabama's legislature has adjourned, with nothing done for the relief of the school crisis. The general verdict seems to be that it was a do-nothing session. Only one bill of major importance was enacted, that providing some measure of participation by the State in the federal relief program for the unemployed. Action on the liquor question was defeated, and Alabama therefore continues to be a wet dry state.

Schools constitute one of the most essential functions of the state's government. The only one who disagrees with that opinion is the state constitution. Since it seems that every other effort in behalf of the schools has failed, let us start up a movement for making a new constitution. The present one has been out of date for many years anyhow.

WORK ON CALERA ROAD

A fleet of trucks is engaged in hauling gravel, putting a six-inch top surface on the highway between Montevallo and Calera. The material is being brought from near Shaw's Store, where the Montevallo Road intersects the paved highway.

It is stated that the entire distance from here to Calera is to have a new gravel surface, after which the black top hard surface will be applied during this summer.

We understand that a convict camp is to be set up on the airport property near Calera, through which the labor will be supplied by the Highway Deartment for paving the road.

A BOY WHO CHEATED

It is depressing and disheartening to read what has happened to a Missouri boy of 17 who was one of 212,000 high school students taking part in a national essay contest on peace. The boy was awarded the $5,000 prize and acclaimed from coast to coast, for the wise suggestions he made for the discouragement of war and promotion of peace. Then it developed that he had copied his essay from a book by a New Jersey scholar. The boy may not realize it, but his life has been ruined even though he were permitted to keep the $5,000. He has exhibited intellectual dishonesty from which he can never recover; he has tried to prove that dishonesty pays. But it does not; no immediate reward or gain from a dishonest act can compensate for the loss the future holds. Boys must be convinced that honesty is the best policy.—Alabama Journal.

GIRL SCOUTS

Tihs is "talk camp" month in Birmingham. We have this year our first campship in Montevallo. Three which will allow three girls a week in Camp Coleman, Birmingham. One is given by the Girl Scout Council; one by American Legion Auxiliary and one by Troop No. 2.

Frances Lee, lieutenant of Troop No. 1 will be a camp Counselor at Camp Coleman.

As the camp folder points out, infinite variety awaits the lucky girl scout who is enrolled for a stay at Camp Coleman. She can swim in the cool water of Cahaba River, hike over the rolling hills and learn to love mother nature as only a good camper can. She will get a thrill cooking over a well-made fire which she has built herself. She may be a laughing little spirit in the Peter Pan unit or an energetic explorer in the merry men group. Again she may be a little older than these girls and then she will enjoy the adventures in store for her in the Adirondack cabins near Treasure Lodge.

Her scouting will be brought to her in such delightful ways she will be always reaching for more. The fortunate girl scout will come back home with a new outlook, a strong, well trained young body and an enthusiasm for camp and scouting that will remain with her through the coming year of school work.

Broad Economic Progress— The Way It Can Be Achieved

By HAROLD G. MOULTON

President, The Brookings Institution, Washington, D. C.

MUCH current discussion of economic problems is focused too intently on the depression to shed real light on our fundamental difficulties. Today's troubles obscure our view of what happened yesterday and what is likely to happen tomorrow. Actually our economic structure was being undermined by grave maladjustments long before the depression; in our "prosperity" years, millions of American families were poor.

Farmers and people in the small towns scarcely need to be told this. In 1929 and before, agriculture was not prosperous. Farmers had to pay high prices for the things they bought, but got little for what they sold. They were in a depression even then—caught between what looked like irresistible forces and an immovable body.

There are about 54 million farmers and people living in the small towns. In addition, professional men, domestic workers, small shopkeepers and others living in the cities were similarly affected, inasmuch as they could not utilize organized pressure to force upward the return on their services. These with their dependents total about 20 million. While their standards of living perhaps were not actually lowered, most of them realized little gain from the great advance in productive efficiency made in that period.

The diminution in purchasing power of these groups, or its failure to rise, in turn, reacted on others. Business men sold less goods, and workers everywhere found it harder to get jobs. The forces that were retarding the farmer's prosperity were by no means helping the man in the city.

Progress—But Not Enough

It is true that our economic system has brought us living standards higher than those existing anywhere else in the world. Between 1900 and 1930, as an example, per capita income, in terms of what it would buy, increased about 38 per cent, at the same time, working hours were reduced about 13 per cent. But the fact of idle plant capacity indicated that we could have produced more goods and thus raised living standards.

Studies we have made at the Brookings Institution, aided by a grant from the Falk Foundation, of Pittsburgh, throw significant light on this. We made a detailed survey of productive capacity in manufacturing, mining, farming and all the other major divisions of industry, resulting in the finding that our productive plant could have turned out about 20 per cent more than it did.

If nobody had wanted to buy anything, the idle plant would have been easily explained. But, millions of families were not getting nearly enough to satisfy their wants.

Nearly 6 million farm and city families received incomes of less than $1,000; 16 millions received less than $2,000; and 19 millions, or 71 per cent of the total, less than $2,500. More than 54 per cent of farm families got less than $1,000. Of course, in considering farm income the lower living costs of rural areas should be kept in mind. But, no matter where they lived, families trying to pay for food, clothing, medical service, education, etc., on $1,000 were not prosperous.

The extent of unfilled wants may be judged by the fact that nearly all family income in the $2,000 class or lower is spent for ordinary consumption goods—food, shelter, clothes, education, etc. Fifteen million families got less than this figure.

Purchasing Power Must Expand

Our productive efficiency is increasing year by year in normal times. That is, we are learning how to make things more cheaply. But if the people are to buy the added products thus made possible, their purchasing power must grow with production.

Expanding purchasing power cannot be created simply by printing more money. That would just raise prices. And we cannot accomplish much by "sharing wealth or income." Such a program would entail taking income from skilled workers, many farmers, small shopkeepers, government clerks, etc. It would not merely "soak the rich."

Purchasing power can be increased only as we learn how to produce goods and services more efficiency and pass the benefits of that efficiency on to the masses. If we devise a way to make two articles where we formerly made one, and we pass on this gain to the people, purchasing power is actually created—the extra article can be sold.

Higher Wages and the Farmer

Organized labor for many years has tried to obtain the benefits of increased efficiency by pressure for higher wages. This gave certain groups of workers more purchasing power, but the effect on farmers has not been favorable. It has forced them to pay higher prices for manufactured goods or has prevented them from obtaining lower ones. The same was true in large degree of the city dwellers mentioned above who do not work for wages, numbering 20 million. An economic disparity was created between two great segments of our population, raising a serious barrier to economic progress.

But if we permit the fruits of man's inventive genius and technological advance to reach the people in the form of price reductions, no such barriers are raised. All classes benefit alike to the extent that they are consumers; the chief gain is in the low income groups where it is most needed.

To the farmer, it means better houses, tools, food, clothes, and in general a steady rise in his standard of living that he can get no other way.

Price reductions, of course, must not come from wage cuts, if they are to increase purchasing power. But we must reduce prices as we learn to make things more cheaply. This is the way we can expand consumption solidly, year after year, which in turn will call forth larger production. Increased efficiency makes price reductions possible; competition must insure that they actually take place.

Price Stabilization Tendencies

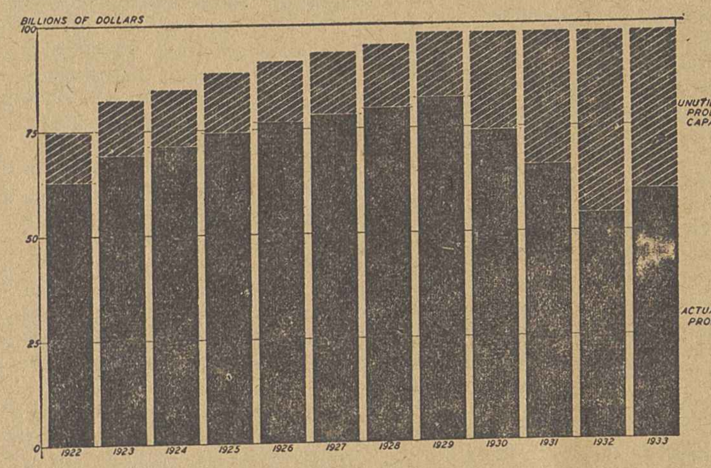
Whereas the period of great technological advance between 1870 and 1890 brought notable price reductions, contributing much to raising living standards, there was little reduction of prices in the similar period of 1922-29. Productive efficiency in manufacturing in the latter era as measured by output per worker, increased about 25 per cent. But forces of price maintenances had become so strong that retail prices in the aggregate remained practically stationary.

Of course, there was competition in many lines, and prices declined accordingly. But this was not true of all producers. Many neglected to face the fact that in the long run they could prosper only as the masses could buy an expanding volume of their goods.

This fact must be faced. We must remove the obstacles to price reductions which now exist, whetever they are. It is the only way that people who live in small towns or on farms, or otherwise do not work for wages, can fully participate in our economic progress. And, unless these do participate, we can have no broad, continued progress.

The failure of industrial prices to decline is primarily responsible for the movement in recent years to attempt an improvement in the farm situation by artificial methods of restricting production, with a view to restoring "price parity" with industry. However helpful such policies may be temporarily, agriculture and industry combined obviously cannot expect to increase the total production of goods and services for the American people as a whole by restricting output and raising prices. National cooperation in the expansion of output, giving to all the people the largest possible consumption, is the paramount necessity.

PRODUCTIVE CAPACITY AND ACTUAL PRODUCTION, 1922-33



This chart illustrates the extent to which we have failed to utilize our full productive capacity. The black area represents what we produced; the shaded area, the additional amount that could have been turned out. Over most of this period, our plant, as a whole could have produced about 20 per cent more than it did, but after 1929 this percentage of non-utilization became much larger.

You Don't Have to Be A College Graduate to Understand This

THE TVA had in its control 250 million dollars worth of property during the years 1934 and 1935, on which, according to its own annual report, it paid during the year 1935 a mere $16,900 in taxes.

The property of Alabama Power Company and of the Tennessee Electric Power Company equal about the same figure, namely, about 250 million dollars. During 1935 they paid 4½ million dollars out in taxes.

Utility Companies Pay 270 Times More Taxes Than TVA!

In other words, the utility companies paid taxes 270 times as great as the TVA on the same property valuation.

And yet the TVA claims that it pays taxes on the same basis as private companies. You don't have to be a college graduate to understand the error of that statement.

Guest Columnists Reveal Inside Facts About Various Sports

Hugh Bradley is still vacationing. This week guest columnists write about soccer, basketball and the relative merits of hockey and polo. The guests are: James Armstrong, secretary United States Football association; Claire F. Bee, director of athletics and basketball coach at Long Island university, and Stewart Iglehart, famous hockey and polo player.

By James Armstrong

SOCCER, or association football, is the most nearly universal and the greatest of all international sports. In the United Kingdom, continental Europe and South America it is the predominating game. Its strong appeal lies in the fact that persons of any weight or size may play it.

Physical fitness is essential to success in all branches of athletics, but soccer demands more stamina than almost any other. The season is unusually long, extending over a period of nine months, from September to May.

In the course of this grind the player acquires the endurance necessary to carry him through a bruising, hard-fought contest calling for ninety minutes of continued action, except for a ten-minute interval between halves.

Soccer is football in its most ancient form and is the one type of football that does not belie the generic term, since it is played with the feet. Its origin is so obscure that Adam may have kicked an apple around the Garden of Eden for Eve's amusement.

Historians tell us the early Greeks played a game roughly resembling football. The Romans also had a pastime in which an inflated ball was used.

Oliver Cromwell speaks of playing football in his letters. At that time it was lawful to kick an opponent in the shins, trip him or take the ball away from him by any means.

Soccer was introduced into the United States gradually, and its development has been slow compared with its progress in other nations, chiefly because it has been regarded as a foreign sport and thought, erroneously, to be lacking in the combative elements favored by the American public. But interest has been increasing rapidly in recent years.

More than 16 nations now play the game. In England and Scotland attendances of 100,000 are not uncommon. The largest stadium in South America was built especially for soccer and accommodates 125,000. America's biggest turn-out was 45,000 for the debut of the famous Hakoah team of Vienna at the Polo Grounds in 1917.

With the growth of the sport in this country came the need of a national organization. The United States Football association was founded in 1913 and was affiliated with the Federation Internationale de Football association the following year.

1,300 Soccer Teams Now in Organization

Approximately 1,300 teams, comprising 22,000 amateur players and 700 professionals, are engaged in competition under the auspices of the U. S. F. A. Although no definite figures are available concerning those taking part in colleges, schools and public playgrounds, it is safe to assume the number is equal to, or greater than, the total of association competitors.

A great deal of impetus has been given to the advancement of soccer in America by frequent visits of well-known teams from abroad. The first foreign invasion was made by the Hakoahs, a clever aggregation of booting stars, and has been repeated on a bigger scale every year.

The advent of a representative combination from the Scottish Football association last summer was a red-letter occasion in the history of American soccer. The technique displayed by the Scots won many adherents.

The U. S. F. A. is going to send a team to the Olympics if the necessary funds can be raised. Although the response to appeals for money has not been very promising to date, the committee in charge still expects to collect the sum required.

If it is successful the United States will be represented by the most powerful group of soccer players ever assembled under the Stars and Stripes.

Let's Forget Changes in Basketball Rules

By Claire Bee

JUDGED by the number of persons playing basketball (between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000), it is truly the national sport. Its continued development will be limited only by the accommodations provided for spectators.

Mr. Ned Irish, through his use of Madison Square Garden the last two years, has created a national impetus which no other factor has equaled. There is no doubt that schools and colleges henceforth will provide seating facilities for crowds of 10,000 to 30,000 when planning gymnasium construction. The game is definitely "big time" and never will return to an intramural status.

The greatest weakness of basketball in the East of the country is the lack of a coaches' association. Virtually every other section has an organization of that nature to serve as a forum for discussion of rules, interpretations and changes.

I am absolutely opposed to elimination of the center jump, the out-of-bounds play after a successful free throw, the three-second rule as applied to the free-throw circle, elevation of the baskets and any change involving a sacrifice of individual technique.

At the basketball coaches' convention held in Chicago last year, Dr. James Naismith, inventor of the game, made a strong appeal for retention of the center jump. Its abolition, he pointed out—and I heartily agree with him—would discriminate against the tall, gangling boy. He is in the minority, anyway, and should not be legislated out of virtually the only team sport for which his "extra" height qualifies him.

Cutting out the center jump would, furthermore, put too much strain on the players by depriving them of the short rest between the scoring of a goal and the return of the ball to the center circle. Basketball is one of the most strenuous of all mass games.

The three-second rule was introduced to prevent the tugging and pushing that accompanies the "back-up" type of pivot play. As applied, however, it not only has eliminated one of the most colorful features of the game but has barred about 20 per cent of the front court from offensive use.

Coach "Prog" Allen of the University of Kansas wants the baskets raised to a height of 12 feet. I can see no reason whatever for this change.

Without doubt, the blocking question caused more intersectional controversy than all other disputed points. No two persons seem to be entirely in agreement concerning the interpretation that should be placed on the rules.

Basketball has proved its merit. Let's forget rule changes.

Hockey's Lure Matter of Game's Uncertainty

By Stewart Iglehart

The tip-off on my personal preference in the sports that have bruised and amused me since my early years is, I think, best shown by the pictures on the walls of my office. The room is fairly compact, the walls large enough for a dozen photos. There is one polo picture, a group shot of the Templeton side that won the Open and Monte Waterbury cups in 1934. All of the others are hockey pictures, mementos of my biggest sports thrills—the Boston Olympics' world championship victory at Prague in 1933.

When a polo match is over rarely is there any lasting fatigue. The hockey player, who, after his two-minute stretch, comes off the ice with any breath left just isn't doing his job.

The skill elements in both games are somewhat similar in that practice—and constant practice is the main item. For most hockey players that means scrimmaging, skating through the defense for a shot at a guarded net. There's exhilaration in that. Only occasionally does a player, like Eddie O'Keefe of the Rovers, work consistently at the penalty shot on any other single specialty. The poloist, from no-goaler to ten-goaler, spends hours hitting from the wooden dummy-horse, or rides alone, making each shot deliberately.

Then when he's all set, the poloist takes the field to find that speed rules. The horse is boss. Various estimates have been placed on the mount's importance in the game. Some scientific followers of the sport have even graphed every pony's step, every man's stroke in an international match to determine it.

Polo Is Faithful in Following Form

However, such a method is neither possible nor necessary. Polo follows form nearly as faithfully as its seasons follow the sun. Hockey doesn't though and because of its many upsets gains another virtue to lure the player and the people who pack the Garden.

Even though it has the element of speed, polo can never achieve nation-wide appeal. It's too definitely a rich man's game, although I believe in the future it will increase with such impetus as Pete Bostwick has injected into it.

Silk Prints and Chic Accessories

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

PRINTED silks headline the fabric story both for daytime and evening. Prints this season have an entirely new and refreshing look. New techniques and new patterns make current prints definitely 1936 and not carry-overs.

The latest treatment for daytime prints spaces tiny amusing motifs over the background. These miniature objects are frequently used instead of the dot theme. Animals are popular in patternings. Horses, and cunning dogs are decoratively delineated. Barnyard themes include roosters, tiny pigs, ducks and flying birds. Even fish and fowl have become print-conscious while butterflies dart over many of the modern silks.

As to flower prints, daytime florals are the most infinitesimal in years. Small bright florals spattered here and there, tiny bouquets and single flowers give silk prints a decidedly different look this season. Larger, more conspicuous flowers are reserved for afternoon and evening. Gorgeous florals on black, white or colored ground reflect exotic beauty.

The woman who diets will find the new vegetable and fruit prints quite to her liking. Radishes, carrots, beets, peppers, parsnips and tiny ears of corn thrive on silk crepe and silk shantung grounds. Fruit prints abound in the mode via apples, cherries, plums, strawberries and grapes in discreet and colorful patternings. The newer prints also include landscapes, newspapers, music notes, the alphabet and Roman numeral motifs.

Two prints are news. Printed silk taffeta is combined with silk crepe in twin prints for jackets and redingote ensembles. Silk mousseline coats match the design of the printed silk crepe frocks worn under them. them.

When one dares to think of the novelty and chic of the new silk prints in the same breath with the novelty and chic of the accessories that will be worn with them the situation becomes positively exciting. For example, jewelers are playing up to the charming and beguiling eccentricities of the new silks by creating vegetable and fruit dress clips, bracelets, buckles and various other gadgets of colorful enamel and other composition, sometimes using bright stone settings to convey the idea.

Gloves too have entered into the conspiracy, coming out in colors to match the bright hues of the prints.

The very attractive young women pictured are, as one sees at a glance, thoroughly fashion-wise as to what is modish in silk prints and flattering accessories. The seated figure is wearing a gown made of a silk print that spaces miniature butterflies instead of the traditional dot. The three butterfly bows of starched lace down the front of the buttoned jacket-blouse together with white roses on her cunningly veiled sailor of lustrous straw give a sprightly touch. Take note of the well-bred version of the leg-o'-mutton sleeve.

The other high-brow lady has chosen one of the new pure silk vegetable prints for her gown. A beet is used as motif of the familiar polka-dot theme for her modish wine and white suit. A new and important detail is the flower treatment that places a carnation on each lapel of her tailored close-fitting jacket. The silk faille hat has a third carnation. The dress is a one-piece type.

GABARDINE SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The perfect tailoring of this distinguished suit is achieved by the use of fine wool gabardine which neither wrinkles or stretches and is never too heavy for comfort. The jacket is subtly fitted. It has two slash pockets set in at the sides. The straight cut skirt has the popular inverted pleat at center front, so that the skirt is amply full for walking but keeps a slim silhouette line.

SPORTS-TYPE SILK FASHION HIGHLIGHT

In the realm of sports-type silks many newcomers are listed. Silk surah is a fashion highlight this season. Designers are using it in monotones, and in dotted or striped effects.

Silk shantung is also a great favorite. The printed silk shantungs are especially smart used alone or in combination with plain. White silk shantung is the chosen medium for many of the handsomest summer tailleurs shown. It tailors beautifully and launders to perfection.

Other sports-type silks include silk foulards, silk seersucker and striped silk crepe. White silk serge, silk pique, silk jersey, parachute silk, checked silk sailcloth, also plain or plaid silk crepe are of intriguing interest. It is well to familiarize oneself with these new silks, in order to buy intelligently and acquire clothes "you love to wear."

Hand-Knit Silk Ensembles Are New Fashion Offering

Important collections show a number of hand-knit silk ensembles. Anny Blatt, first to create a hand-knitted evening gown, has launched a hand-knitted silk wedding gown and a fine, sheer hand-knit veil. Her collection also includes knitted silk suits, dresses and blouses in daytime, cocktail and dinner styles.

New pure silk yarns have been developed for both hand-made and machine-knit costumes. They are easy to work with, wash like lingerie and are dressy enough for afternoon and bridge wear. The new silk yarns, which are the latest word to knitters, come in a wide range of colors both dark and light.

To Match Prints

One of the new ideas that Paris is advancing is that of porcelain jewelry painted to match the printed dresses with which it is worn.

New Atom Smashing Device at Princeton Will Aid Science

Cyclotron Will Be Most Powerful in Existence

PRINCETON, N. J.—The installation of a cyclotron, calculated to bombard atoms with particles moving almost half again as fast as those produced by existing machines, has been started at Palmer Physical laboratory of Princeton university.

The bombarding particles will consist of hydrogen ions, and deutrons or charged particles of heavy hydrogen. Results obtained from paper calculations and from a small working model show that they will travel with a velocity of 19,000 miles a second. Their maximum energy is expected to be twice that of particles from present machines.

A large magnet, built especially for use in the cyclotron, makes possible the attainment of this high speed. It is hoped that the machine will shed further light on the old problem of disintegrating the atom.

Operator Is Protected.

A breastwork of earth will protect the operators of the machine. Water tanks may also be constructed as an additional safeguard, as cyclotron experimenters are exposed to hazards somewhat similar to those the early X-ray pioneers faced.

When the cyclotron is in use the two vacuum tubes, which produce high-frequency oscillations at 20 meters, will require 50 to 60 kilowatts, as much power as is used by a large metropolitan broadcasting station. The oscillations take place inside the magnet, which prevents the waves from interfering with ordinary radio reception.

Drs. Malcolm C. Henderson, instructor in physics at Prince university, and Milton C. White, a National Research Council fellow at Princeton, are the designers of the machine. Both men participated in the pioneer cyclotron experiments at the University of California.

How Size Compares.

Explaining how the Princeton installation is expected to be the most powerful in existence, Doctor White said:

"The tip of the pole pieces of the Princeton installation will be 35 inches in diameter, while the most powerful similar apparatus, of Dr. E. O. Lawrence at the University of California, has 27-inch diameter pole tips. Since the energy of the accelerated particles produced increases as the square of the diameter, we get 35 square divided by 27 squared or approximately 1.7. However, the more powerful oscillators at Princeton will perhaps permit operation at higher magnetic fields than is now possible at Berkeley, so we expect, theoretically, to attain twice the present energy."

Language Scholars Trace the Alphabet Back to 2000 B. C.

NEW YORK. — Three inscriptions by the ancient Etruscans, preserved in New York and Philadelphia museums, are helping to clear up one of the puzzles of how the alphabet originated.

The three pieces of writing, now among museum treasures of this country, suggest strongly that the Romans got the alphabet letters directly from the Greeks.

This has been one of the weak and uncertain links in the long chain of evolution through which scholars trace the modern alphabet. From modern letters—in which this newspaper is printed—the evolutionary changes go back through Latin alaphabet, Greek forms, Phoenician, even farther back toward a still somewhat mysterious origin, perhaps near 2000 B. C. in the Near East.

Origin of Latin.

For many years, language students have argued over two rival theories as to where the Latin alphabet was borrowed. One faction said the Romans caught the idea from Greek colonists in southern Italy. Another faction thought that Rome's near neighbors, the Etruscans, were the people who gave Rome inspiration for an alphabet.

Now, it appears that the Etruscans can be left out of the alphabet picture in this direct line of succession.

The Etruscans, who rose to power in Italy about 800 years before Christ, have proved one of the most baffling of ancient peoples to understand.

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

ARMIDA, the fascinating little Mexican girl who has made a name for herself on the screen, the stage and the air (at present she's heard from coast to coast on the "Paris Night Life" program) recently returned from Hollywood to New York with a lot of information about the radio programs which screen stars like best. She'd been making shorts in the movie center, but she checked up on the broadcasts between times.

Charlie Chaplin

She found that Charlie Chaplin doesn't listen to the radio comedians; he likes the broadcasts of symphony concerts and the songs of Lawrence Tibbett, John Charles Thomas and Nino Martini. Bing Crosby likes to hear Dick Powell sing; he listens to Rudy Vallee's broadcasts, too, and to Jessica Dragonette. Joan Crawford will take dance music every time. And Claudette Colbert, Ginger Rogers and Fred Astair rarely fail to listen to Major Bowes' amateur hour.

Marlene Deitrich got what she wanted again. After fussing with Paramount over "I Loved a Soldier," and announcing that she'd go to Europe as fast as she could get there, to make a picture, she stayed in Hollywood, did some effective talking, and landed the role of leading lady in "The Garden of Allah," which Merle Oberon was supposed to make. Which means that now there's less love lost between the two.

Doris Dudley, whom you'll see before long in an R K O picture, believes that you've got to be goofy if you're going to get along either on the stage or on the screen. As she's a remarkably clever actress (though she has had very little experience), she is likely to become one of our most important movie stars—so don't miss her first appearance on the screen.

Ann Sothern had a grand time in New York, where she once appeared in musical comedy as Harriet Lake. Like all new arrivals from Hollywood, the play she wanted to see was "Queen Victoria," Helen Hayes' current success. And —like all the others, she left cheering.

She is so pretty that people turn on the street to stare at her; they don't recognize her, as a rule, but she has no illusions about her own greatness so that doesn't bother her.

Fred MacMurray

Fred MacMurray seems to be the fair haired boy on the Paramount lot these days—perhaps because Gary Cooper seems inclined to sign with Samuel Goldwyn when his present contract expires. Fred has a new seven-year contract, and is slated to make three pictures that were originally intended for the laconic Mr. Cooper.

Jean Parker's marriage startled a lot of people; she was honeymooning with her bridegroom, a young newspaper man, before most people realized that she knew him. If you want to congratulate her, address her as Mrs. George E. MacDonald.

They have four pictures lined up for Eleanor Powell when she feels well enough to begin work again, and how she dreads them! She feels that she gave everything she had in her first one, and doesn't see what she can do now that will interest those of us who sat out front!

Fred Parker, whom you've heard on the air in a number of programs, is said to receive more proposals than any other radio star. He claims that they're attracted not by his romantic tenor voice, or by his personality, but by his salary; it runs into four figures each week.

Pressure Water System Advantage

Plan an Aid to Efficiency of Farming Operations; Great Convenience.

By E. R. Gross, Professor of Agricultural Engineering, New Jersey College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Farmers who have installed pressure water systems have found that they are not only a great advantage to members of the family, but that they also help to increase the efficiency of some farming operations.

With fresh running water in the dairy barn, cows drink more water and produce more milk. Running water also adds greatly to the convenience of milk cooling and utensil washing. On poultry farms, water may be piped to each water pen or fountain in the house or to convenient places on the range.

On larger farms the pressure water syste mshould be large enough to supply needs for fruit and vegetable washing. With auxiliary power and pumping equipment, it may even supply spraying and irrigation needs and afford considerable fire protection.

Where a water tank can be located on a hill so that the reservoir is higher than the farm buildings, a farm may be equipped with running water by a gravity water supply system.

The system should be carefully planned and effectively installed. Important considerations are the size of pump, storage tank and capacity of the well or water supply. Minor needs include proper installation of fixtures, ample pipe sizes, sufficient depth to prevent freezing and stop and waste valves where drainage is necessary.

Sow Lespedeza in Oats, Recommended by Experts

It has been amply demonstrated that where phosphate at the rate of about 125 pounds per acre is sown with oats and Korean lespedeza is grown with oats year after year, without ever plowing and without any other rotation, the oats crop becomes better each succeding year. The phosphate makes up for the lacking element in most of our fields while the lespedeza provides the nitrogen. Hence on the same field year after year a good grain feed for horses may be produced together with a fine summer and fall pasture for cows and sheep. Plowing lespedeza sod is unnecessary; all that needs be done is to disc the ground and drill the oats. This practice, as one can see, protects the soil from washing practically the year around.

If pastured, it is recommended that lespedeza be grazed early, when it is 3 or 4 inches high; and if cut for hay it should be mowed before the lower leaves dry up and fall off. Early grazing will prevent the plant from growing tall with the foliage limited to the top of the plant—it will cause the foliage to grow near the ground as well as at the top and hence more leaves are available. — Missouri Farmer.

Fattening the Cows

If the cow is in thin flesh she should be fed six to ten pounds a day of a mixture of 300 pounds ground corn, 200 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds bran, and 50 pounds of high protein concentrates. If the cow is in good condition, 12 to 14 pounds of alfalfa hay a day, 30 pounds silage, and 2 to 4 pounds of the milking herd mixture or of a commercial fitting grain will put the cow in excellent shape. In mentioning a specific amount to feed the eye of the feedrr, as in all other handling of live stock, is very important. A good feeder regulates the amount of grain fed by watching the appetite of the cow and the rate she is putting on flesh. With poorer quality hay the feeder realizes more grain and higher protein is necessary.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Animals for Slaughter

All animals intended for home slaughter should be in good health and reasonably fat, says a Minnesota university authority. At packing plants government inspectors see that no diseased animals go for food, but farmers must use their own judgment. Meat from a thin animal is usually tough and unpalatable. Only well-fed animals that have been gaining and possess some finish will produce good quality meat. The fat animals produce the tender meat. Animals should be neither too old nor too young.

In the Feed Alley

Is Bible Reading Champ; Holds Record of 125 Times

The story of the Bible is one that never grows old to Mrs. Kibbie Comer, eighty-nine, of Sherman, Texas. In 78 years of steady reading she has read the New Testament 125 times, the Old Testament, 63. She started her Bible reading at the age of twelve, when illness kept her from attending a church rally, but illness since then has seldom interrupted her favorite pastime. "We had no Sunday school literature when I was a girl," she said. "We just memorized five or six chapters of the Bible each week." At fifteen she had memorized half the New Testament. She believes the present generation is not as faithful to Bible teachings as hers.

Thurston, World Famous Magician Passes In Florida At the Age Of 66

Miami Beach, Fla., April 13. — Howard Thurston, the man who produced living things from nowhere and made them disappear again in thin air, passed through the curtain of death here Monday.

The 66-year-old magician, who fooled kings and common folk and then became their lifelong friend, died of pneumonia at 1:30 p.m., following a cerebral hemorrhage.

The second Mrs. Thurston, who became his wife after he changed a box of candy into a white rabbit in her hands on a Chicago theatre stage, was with him when he died. His daughter, Jane, who worked as his chief assistant thru years of magic on platforms throughout the world, also survives. The first Mrs. Thurston died in 1934.

The famous trickster was forced into retirement last year when he collapsed during a performance at Charleston, W. Va., and was unable to rejoin his company. His daughter carried on while he sought to regain his health. Another hemorrhage here March 30 weakened him greatly.

Earlier—last Dec. 13—he said he had performed his greatest trick —"I've recaptured my health." But his hopes were greater than his strength and he had to stay close to his apartment.

He was born in Columbus, Ohio, and was a magician at heart from his boyhood although he followed parental wishes and prepared himself for the ministry.

Hermann, the great magician, once took a brass collar button from the forehead of young Thurston. He gave the button to the boy and Thurston cherished it more than the gift from Emperor Franz Josef, of Austria-Hungary.

Thurston studied for the ministry at Mount Hermon Academy in Massachusetts and was on his way to the University of Pennsylvania to continue this course when he accidentally saw Hermann buying a railroad ticket to Syracuse, N. Y. Thurston also bought a ticket for Syracuse and thus forsook the ministry for the magician's stage.

His knowledge of theology and his interest in magic caused him to enter into many discussions of the after life. He was reported to have formed an agreement with the late Harry Houdini, another great magician; the late Arthur Conan Doyle, British spiritualist, and author of the Sherlock Holmes stories; and the late Charles Carter, who died recently in Bombay, India, to attempt a reunion after death.

Mrs. Thurston Monday declined to discuss the reported agreement saying "There have been too many conflicting stories about that already, but I might discuss it later."

Mrs. Houdini, in Hollywood, Calif., said "He's joined Houdini now. No doubt they're up there telling each other a lot of tricks."

Mrs. Houdini, who claims to know the code specified in the agreement, said "There has as yet been no authentic communication with me from beyond the grave, but I am still hoping. I have a shrine at my home here—the light has been burning since Houdini died. That is conected with Houdini's secret compacts."

Mrs. Thurston said the prestidigitator's body would be sent to Columbus Tuesday for burial there. She said she would accompany the body to Ohio.

Success for Thurston was not immediate. He specialized in card tricks and used them to sell potato peelers, to mystify small-time theater audiences and to work his way up from backstreet theaters to Broadway and the greatest stages of America and Europe.

From 1900 on Thurston fooled audiences of kings, statesmen and common folk all over the world. The present King of England became his fast friend because both were interested in fast handwork with cards.

He produced four kings from a deck of cards on a wharf in Copenhagen to amuse King Edward, then the Prince of Wales; King Christian of Denmark; King George of Greece, and the Czar of Russia asked him for a fifth king and he picked it out of "no where."

In 1908 he succeeded Harry Kellar as the dean of magicians and perfected the art of illusion, adding to his famous card tricks and other acts such feats as producing living animals from "thin air" and having them disappear, and "decapitating" his assistants.

He was the inventor of a lifesaving device adopted by the government and the author of several books and a play. He was president of the Society of American Magicians, a Thirty-Second Degree Mason and a member of the Elks, the Kiwanis Club and the Lions Club.

Alabama Power Customers Increase Use Of Electricity

Still Lower Rates Delayed by High Taxes, Says Report

THOMAS W. MARTIN

In the annual report of Alabama Power Company, recently mailed to its stockholders, Thomas W. Martin, President, reports that while the sale of electricity to regular customers of the Company was almost 12% greater in 1935 than in 1934, the amount of money received for it increased only approximately 9%. Operating expenses and taxes increased over 12%, or one-third faster than revenue.

The report indicates that at the end of 1935 Alabama Power Company was rendering service directly to 515 communities in Alabama and in addition was serving 63 communities at wholesale. The average use of electricity in homes served by it gained substantially, while the average rates for the service declined sharply. During a ten year period, 1926-1936, the residential customers have increased their average use 152%, while the average rates have declined 54%.

This increased use of electricity is attributed in large part to the immediate-objective rate plan, under which the rate per kilowatt-hour becomes less with increased use by the customer, and which, established in Alabama in 1933 has since been adopted in whole or with modifications in 30 other states. However, a major part of the increase in use is felt to have resulted from the increasing appreciation of better lighting and more labor-saving devices in the home which has been brought about through aggressive effort on the part of the Company's sales department in cooperation with Alabama electrical merchants. The "immediate-objective" rate plan of 1933, which included a low rate of 1c per kilowatt-hour became available to all urban residential customers April 1, 1936. (In recent weeks a further downward revision of the rate has been made, resulting in immediate annual savings of $60,000 to approximately 20,000 customers, and permitting the additional use of $324,000 of electricity by 60 thousand customers, much of it at the low 1c rate).

The report states that as a result of the promotional activities of the Company, the average annual use of electricity per residential customer crossed the 1,000 kilowatt-hour mark in January, 1936, a record attained by only one other large utility company east of the Rocky Mountains. This average was exceeded in 61 communities served by Alabama Power Company during 1936. The annual use per residential customers in these communities ranged from 1,006 to 3,223 kilowatt-hours.

A chart contained in the report reveals that in these 61 towns or communities, the average annual use per residential customer equals or exceeds the average annual use in three of the towns so widely publicized by the TVA, and that there are 30 towns or communities served by Alabama Power Company where the use of electric service in the home is as great or greater than in three other towns served by TVA.

More than 50% of the electricity used in residences served by Alabama Power Company is provided at 2c per kilowatt-hour or less, and more than 20% is sold at 1¼c or less.

The report of the Company contends that its promotional activities accomplish more in creating an appreciation of and desire for the labor-saving, comfort-creating benefits resulting from the liberal use of electricity than does the lowering of the rates, because an understanding of what electricity will do for him is necessary before a customer will want to increase his use of it, whatever the rate. When he understands that increased use can lift labor and toil from the backs of women by lightening the burden of many home tasks; by protecting the health and lives of the family; by making the home a more pleasant place in which to live and thus improve the standards of citizenship in many ways, he wants to use more electricity.

At the close of 1935 the Company was serving approximately 40,000 rural customers; that is, customers located within rural areas and districts within the definition of the Federal Bureau of the Census.

Rural customers represent 35% of the 114,187 customers of the Company. Of these rural customers, approximately 30,000 were served at the Company's low urban rates. In 1935 the Company added 285 miles of lines to its rural system and has approved for construction during 1936, 729 miles of new rural lines, which added to the present lines, will make a total of 3,132 miles of rural lines.

A review of the Company's studies of soil erosion over the past two years is contained in the report, and states that as yet there is no serious impairment of the reservoir volume of its several dams, but views as serious the loss of fertile topsoil in the farms of adjoining counties. In October 1934 the Company planted its first seed beds for the propagation of slash pine near Jordan Dam, and in the spring of 1935 largely increased this planting. It also transplanted to its nurseries located near Wetumpka and Alexander City seedlings obtained from the State nursery at Livingston. In January of this year it planted great quantities of seedlings on lands which it owns adjoining Martin Dam.

Twenty-one different kinds of direct taxes are paid by the Company, of which 14 are State and 7 Federal. Total taxes paid equal 15c out of every dollar collected by the Company and are approximately equal to 75% of the total salaries and wages paid to its 2,200 employees. These taxes totalled $2,565,967.96 in 1935, an increase of nearly 11% over 1934. The report states that the constant tendency of Federal, State and local governments to take each year an increased share of the earnings of the Company constitute a major threat to its stability and the continuity of dividends to thousands of stockholders who have invested their savings in it. It is suggested that those responsible for raising public revenues, the institutions supported by such revenues, and other taxpayers, should recognize that in each instance of entry of government into the realm of private endeavor, no matter in what particular line, the flow of taxes from the business replaced is practically, if not altogether cut off, thus forcing the tax collecting authorities to make up the deficit by higher levies upon the diminishing number of those left in the ownership of private property.

The striking example of this condition resulting from the gradual taking over of electric operations in the State under the TVA plan of operation presents a problem which educational and governmental authorities and the taxpayers must meet, namely: how and from whom will this deficit be made up?

The report contrasts Alabama Power Company's payment of taxes on lands acquired by it for the same purposes as those of the TVA, namely the production and sale of electric energy. The Company's lands are assessed on the average 50% higher than adjoining lands of other taxpayers, while the TVA pays no taxes on the land it acquires, removing from the tax rolls, according to a recent 1936 report of the Bureau of Business Research, University of Alabama, assessed values of $3,000,000 in Limestone, Lauderdale, Madison and Morgan Counties.

In the report President Martin states, "Perhaps we may take hope from the recent expression of Dr. Morgan, Chairman of TVA, quoting the President as follows: 'If they (public plants) are to serve as comparison, they must be open and above-board, with nothing hidden. They must be fair, with no special, arbitrary advantages. They must pay taxes, just as private companies must do, and every other reasonable charge, if they are to provide us with a fair comparison.'"

A review of the TVA situation as it affects the Company is contained in the report, which states "The rates of TVA bear no fair relation to the total costs of supplying the service. If this Company could be relieved in the same proportion of its obligation to pay interest and dividends, and be placed on the same basis as the TVA with respect to taxes, it could reduce even the TVA rates by more than 25%.

"The bookkeeping of the TVA and TVA's exemption from taxation do not mean that the cost of producing and distributing electric energy has been reduced. Such procedure by the TVA merely shifts the cost of electric service from present users to taxpayers throughout the United States."

Meeting Dates Set For Soil Program

MAY 5TH IS FINAL DATE FOR ENTERING NEW FARM BENEFITS

May 15 is set as the final date for making work sheets to join in on the Soil Conservation Program.

Since this is a new program and a little difficult to understand, I want to ask those who have not made work sheets to meet us and let us explain the program further.

Those growing cotton may leave out 35 per cent of their base cotton acreage, or any smaller amount, and take part in this program. A man with a cotton base of 10 acres may leave out one acre of cotton and get pay for the one acre, and then get the soil building payments. Those not growing cotton can take part in the soil building program and get the benefit payments.

This is a much larger program than merely adjusting the supply and price of cotton, since the soil is to be conserved and built; and yet the producer will get a benefit payment.

It must be clearly understood that just taking cotton land out of cotton will not give the farmer a payment, but payments will be made for leaving out cotton, terracing, and for growing soil conserving crops. Leaving out cotton, terracing and soil building will be paid for only when matched by the proper amount of soil conserving crops.

Due to the program being late, it is necessary to do the work in group meetings, and we have arranged the schedule below to explain it more fully, and to assist in making out work sheets for those who have not already made them. Please take off a little time and meet us in your community.

Monday, May 4—Wilsonville 8 to 12 o'clock; Harpersville 1 to 5 p.m.

Wednesday, May 6—Dunnavant 8 to 10 o'clock; Sterrett 8 to 12 o'clock; Vandiver 10 to 12 o'clock; Vincent 1 to 4:30 o'clock.

Thursday, May 7—Montevallo 8 to 12 o'clock; Calera 1 to 4 o'clock; Maylene 1 to 4 o'clock.

Friday, May 8—Saginaw School 8 to 10 o'clock; Siluria 10:15 to 12 o'clock; Pelham 1 to 2 o'clock; Helena 1 to 2 o'clock; Chelsea 2:45 to 4:30 o'clock.

Saturday, May 9—Columbiana all day.—A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

Baptist W. M. S. Meeting Held Monday

The Baptist Women's Missionary Society met Monday afternoon, April 27th, at the church. This was the regular business and Circle meeting.

The three circles met for short business before the general session. The feature of this meeting was talks by two young ladies of the college who had recently visited the Baptist Orphanage at Troy. They were sent out from the Sociology department to study and make inquiries about the different institutions in the state and found the orphanage to be an ideal home for our children, and they were very much pleased with conditions there. The time of the meetings was changed to 4 o'clock, beginning with the first meeting in May. Fourteen members were present.

Folk Festival An Enjoyable Affair

The Montevallo Elementary School pupils presented a delightful entertainment at Palmer Hall last Saturday night in the form of a Folk Festival.

The program was divided into three parts, the first of which was Mother Goose songs and dances by the first and second grades.

Part two was a rendition of several numbers by the High School Band, directed by Mr. York Kildea.

In Part three, filk songs and dances of many lands were reproduced by different grades, as follows: Third grade, Sweden; fourth grade, Germany; fifth grade, South of Europe; sixth grade, England.

The program presented a simple grouping of activities which the children actually do during school. No attempt had been made to perfect the various activities for a public performance.

The costumes, typical of the numbers in which they were used, were made by the boys and girls themselves, under the direction of Miss Allen, Miss Boyd, Miss Weir, Miss Harris, Mrs. Peterson, Miss Jones, Miss Dillworth, Miss Matthews, Miss Wells, Miss Rice and Miss Hood.

The student teachers of music and physical education, with the assistance of their supervisors, planned and directed the festival as a whole. The costumes were made possible through the kindness of the P. T. A.

A large audience greeted the young performers, and the clapping of many hands spoke the approval and pleasure with which the program was received.

Subsidy Payments On Cotton Now Ready

The subsidy payment up to 12 cents on 1935 cotton crop is available to all farmers producing cotton in 1935.

The time limit for filing application for this payment on cotton already sold is May 15.

If you have not already made your application and desire to do so, I want to urge you to do this before May 15.

When you come to the office to make application, please bring a copy of all sales slips so that we can check to see if we have copies of all sales certificates.

Application for this payment places no obligation on anyone, neither does it have any connection with any future farm program.—A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

Farm Wages Reach High Peak

Farm wages on April 1 were the highest for that date since 1931, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Farm wage rates per month, with board, averaged $20.89 the country over; per month, without board, $30.87; per day, with board, $1.05; per day, without board, $1.43.

The supply of farm labor exceeds the demand, but by a smaller margin than on January 1 this year or on April 1 a year ago. To this is attributed the higher wages.

The April 1 supply figure is reported the smallest for that date since 1929, the reduction being attributed to increased industrial employment, and to "the many relief and road building projects now in operation."

Day wages, without board, range from an average of 92 cents in the East-South Central states to an average of $2.40 in the Pacific States. Day wages, with board, range from 71 cents in East South Central states to $1.62 in Pacific states.

Monthly wages, without board range from an average of $20.70 in East-South Central states to an average of $56.59 in Pacific states and monthly wages with board, from $14.09 in East-South Central states to $36.50 in Pacific states.

Uses of Fertilizer For Cotton

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FROM COUNTY AGENT LAUDERDALE

To the Farmers of Shelby County:

Should cotton fertilized with 6-8-4 be side-dressed? When does side dressing pay? If cotton is side-dressed when should it be applied?

These questions are answered in a recent statement of Prof. M. J. Funchess, director of the Alabama Experiment Station.

"When Side-Dressing Pays.—Let us consider first the case that may be made for side-dressing cotton. The average yield from 50 different crops of cotton in Alabama at eight different places was 987 pounds of cotton from 3-10-3 and 3-8-5 grades of fertilizer. In these same experiments a fertilizer carrying almost identical quantities of phosphoric acid and potash but with 6 per cent nitrogen instead of 3 per cent nitrogen produced 1,225 pounds of cotton, or an increase of 238 pounds of cotton for the additional 3 per cent nitrogen. This simply means that if a 3-8-5 or 3-10-3 be side-dressed with a sufficient quantity of nitrate, an additional yield of cotton may be had at a very low cost.

If we turn these figures around we may say that if such fertilizers as 3-10-3 and 3-8-5 are not side-dressed, then we are wasting a good part of the phosphoric acid and potash applied. Surely there is little enough profit in growing cotton to warn us not to waste anything in the way of fertilizer. The sure way to avoid wasting part of the phosphoric acid and potash is to add sufficient side-dressing to fertilizers carrying 3 per cent nitrogen to bring them up to the equivalent of 6 per cent nitgrogen

Some specific examples will be given to make this clear. Suppose a farmer has applied 400 pounds of 3-8-5 or 3-10-3; he has supplied only half the nitrogen he needs. To balance his fertilizer he needs to apply at least 75 pounds of nitrate of soda or nitrate of lime as a side-dressing. This 75 pounds of nitrate should cost something like $1.25 and should return three or four times its cost in terms of seed cotton.

If 400 pounds per acre of 4-10-4 or 4-8-4 be applied, then the farmer would need to apply at least 50 pounds of nitrate as a side-dressing.

'When to Side-Dress.—It should be stressed that whatever nitrate side-dressing is applied should be put out at the first cultivation after chopping. Many years ago the experiment station determined that the best time to apply side-dressing was immediately after chopping.

This statement has been published repeatedly throughout the state, but one frequently sees farmers applying side - dressing when the cotton has begun to put on squares. To be sure, this late application will do some good, but it cannot do the maximum amount of good.

Let it clearly be understood that those farmers who have used a 6-8-4 under cotton this year should not side-dress such cotton. A 6-8-4 applied before planting is all of the fertilizer that should be applied to cotton and does away with the need of side-dressings of any kind.".—A. A. Lauderdale, County Agent.

Development of State Parks Moves Forward

Atlanta, April 18.—Development in Alabama's 13 state park areas will move forward this week in the seventh period of Civilian Conservation Corps enrollments with more than 2,200 youths on the job, according to preliminary figures just revealed by the National Park Service at its regional offices here.

In the TVA region of North Alabama, there were 333 CCC enrollees at two camps engaged in projects at Monte Sano State park near Huntsville. An additional 136 were at work at Nitrate Plant Reservation at Wilson Dam.

The sixth 6-month enrollment term since creation of the CCC in 1933 closed April 1 with a wide variety of projects under way in all 13 parks.

Despite unfavorable weather conditions, construction was completed on three overnight cabins and 27 outdoor fire-places. There were 25 miles of linear surveys and about 1,000 acres of topographical surveys. About 900 acres were planted in trees and workers set out 2,700 other shrubs and small trees. The youths strung four miles of telephone lines and completed four miles of fire breaks.

Altogether, 33,918 "man days" of work were accomplished in Alabama under joint supervision of state officials and the National Park Service, of which J. H. Gadsby is Regional Officer.

Colonel Page S. Bunker, of Montgomery, is state park autohrity, and Sam F. Brewster, of Knoxville, Tenn., is the authority for parks located in the TVA territory.

The entire CCC park program, which is being carried forward nationally by 361 camps, is headed by Robert Fechner, Director of Emergency Conservation Work.

MONDAY, MAY 25 WILL SEE FIRST TRAFFIC OVER THE STRUCTURE

The new bridge, spanning the Southern Railway tracks and Shoal Creek at one jump, will be open to traffic on Monday morning, May 25, according to an official statement given out Tuesday by engineer, Jack Burleson, in charge of the work.

Concrete for the last of the fourteen spans of the structure was poured Monday. Regulations require that twenty-eight days elapse before traffic can be carried. This, Mr. Burleson says, definitely fixes the date of May 25 when the bridge can be opened.

Meanwhile, he says, there will be sufficient time for completion of the approaches and all other minor details of construction, a few of which are yet to be completed.

A small-sized mountain of dirt has been moved and transferred to either end of the bridge for construction of two huge fills that constitute the approaches to the bridge. These fill, it is said, will in all probability be finally completed this week.

Montevallo will hail the opening of the new bridge with much joy. It will make a most fitting and impressive entrance to the city, compared with that which we have had in hte past.

Stiewer to Be Keynoter for Republicans — Flood Control Bill Passes Senate—Battle Over New Tax Bill in House.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

Senator Stiewer

WHEN the Republicans gather in national convention at Cleveland next June their keynote for their Presidential campaign will be sounded by Frederick Stiewer, the eloquent and handsome United States senator from Oregon. He was selected to be temporary chairman of the convention by unanimous vote of the arrangements committee of the national committee after due consideration had been given the names of several other prominent Republicans.

Observers held that the main motive in picking Stiewer was a desire of the party leaders to give the convention a western atmosphere right at the start, with an especial eye to agriculture. The senator has been actively identified with wheat growing and his home town, Portland, is a center of the northwest battleground of the November elections. His colleague is Senator Charles L. McNary, one of the authors of the old McNary-Haugen agriculture bill and by many regarded as a possible dark horse in the Presidential nomination race. Governor Landon said he was glad to hear Stiewer had been chosen, and it was believed Senator Borah also approved, for in many ways Stiewer has proved himself liberal, and at the same time has upheld the Constitution and the American form of government.

Congressman Bertrand Snell of New York, minority leader in the house, was selected to be permanent chairman of the convention, a position he held in the convention of 1932.

THROUGH William Allen White, Kansas editor, the Landon camp suggested to Senator Borah that he abandon his campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination, go to the Cleveland convention as a delegate and assist in writing a liberal platform. Mr. Borah rejected the proposition, saying:

"Naturally I am interested in the platform, but, after all, a platform doesn't mean much unless you know who is going to run on it. I am more interested in the latter proposition just now."

If the Landon forces can control the convention, Mr. White may be made chairman of the resolutions committee. So it was taken that his proposal indicated that the Landon group was willing to accept as liberal a platform as Mr. Borah might desire in order to check dissension within the party. The Idaho senator has made no direct attack on Landon, but has indicated that he thought there was too much "big business" influence in the Landon movement.

H. L. Ritter

FEDERAL JUDGE HALSTED L. RITTER of Florida was found guilty on impeachment charges by the senate and removed from office, being the fourth federal jurist to be ousted in this manner. On each of the first six articles of impeachment a majority of senators voted for his acquittal; but on the seventh article, which was a generalized summary of the charges against him, he was convicted by a vote of 56 to 28.

An order declaring Ritter should be "forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States" was defeated, 76 to 0.

DISREGARDING warnings by Senator Vandenberg of Michigan against too hasty action, the senate passed a bill introduced by Senator Overton of Louisiana authorizing the expenditure of $272,000,000 for flood control work on the lower Mississippi river and its tributaries. There was no record vote. The bill has no relation to the omnibus flood control measure now pending, which may reach a billion. The sum named in the senate bill is authorized merely to be appropriated and will have to be put in a deficiency appropriation bill. Senator Overton declared it was justified by emergency conditions.

In addition to the 272 million dollars there is authorized an appropriation of 15 millions to be allocated by the secretary of war and used in rescue work or repair and maintenance of flood control works.

THE administration's bill to levy about 800 million dollars in new taxes yearly was introduced in the house by the ways and means committee, and a fierce battle started immediately. The Republican minority of the committee issued a report which stated that the proposed tax law was "unsound in principle, will undermine business stability, is another step toward regimentation of all business, and is not designed to raise revenue but admittedly is another New Deal experiment."

Conservative Democrats joined with the Republicans in this attack against the bill, but the administration leaders were confident the measure would pass before May 1.

Complete revision of the corporation tax system is the main objective of the bill. It levies a graduated tax on corporation income, based on percentage of earnings withheld from distribution to stockholders in the form of dividends.

The majority report asserted the measure would raise about $803,000,000 the first year, but admitted that over a three-year period revenue would fall $334,000,000 short of the President's budget-balancing program. It was added that the deficit could be acted on "more intelligently" next session.

Baron Aloisi

OCCUPATION of Addis Ababa and all of Ethiopia was the price demanded by Italy for an armistice in East Africa when the council of the League of Nations met again in Geneva. Baron Pompeo Aloisi presented the ultimatum on behalf of Dictator Mussolini. Wolde Mariam, representing Ethiopia, countered with a request that the league invoke all penalties against Italy under article 16 of the covenant, these including military sanctions as well as the economic penalties which the league has been trying to enforce. The British and French delegates explained the stand of their respective governments in the embroglio.

The league was helpless, and having received the discouraging report of the conciliation committee, was compelled to confess it could not find means to attain peace. France will not consent to the imposition of military sanctions, and Great Britain naturally will not undertake to enforce them by herself. It appeared the poor Ethiopians were to be abandoned to their fate, meaning the extinction of their empire and their exploitation by Italy.

The council adopted a resolution regretting its inability to end the war, reminding league members that they should continue the sanctions and asking Italy to be generous in bringing the conflict to a close.

Anthony Eden in his address to the council warned France that she might expect from Great Britain no further support against aggression by Germany than France had given against Italy.

Latest dispatches said the Ethiopians were blasting the road between Dessye and Addis Ababa, and that the advance of some of the Italian columns had been halted by strong attacks. The emperor was afield with his troops and turned the government at the capital over to Crown Prince Asfa Wosan.

THAT old gold mine at Moose River, Nova Scotia, provided an epic tale of unselfish and heroic human endeavor that will be told for many a year. For ten days more than a hundred experienced miners strove unceasingly to rescue three men who had been trapped by the fall of dirt and rocks in the 140-foot level of the abandoned mine they were inspecting. Machinery and other equipment were brought from far away. A diamond drill was driven through and through this small opening communication was established and food was dropped down, but already one of the three was dead of hunger and exhaustion. Finally the desperate efforts of the rescuers were successful and the two survivors were brought safely to the surface, together with the body of the dead man. Those saved were Dr. D. E. Robertson, famous and beloved surgeon of Toronto, and C. A. Scadding. The one who did not live was Herman Magill, also of Toronto.

WHAT American newspaper publishers think of the actions of the Black lobby committee was expressed forcibly and unequivocally in resolutions adopted by their national association at its annual meeting in New York. The committee was accused of having violated the first, fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution by its seizures of private communications, and the publishers recommended that all victims of the committee's acts seek civil damages and demand the "prosecution of all involved in the odious affair under the criminal statutes of the United States."

SENATOR KENNETH McKELLAR of Tennessee made an attempt to reduce by $225,000 the appropriation for the federal bureau of investigation, otherwise J. Edgar Hoover's G-men, and failed ignominously. Only McKellar and one other senator were in the affirmative on a viva voce vote, and in the brief but lively debate several Democrats, including Majority Leader Joe Robinson, joined Senator Vandenberg in denouncing the proposed reduction. The Michigan man's remarks were caustic. Said he:

"I will go as far as the senator from Tennessee in all matters of economy, but it seems to me that this is a peculiar place to start economizing. The bureau says it needs 175 more men. If the senator wants to save 175 men, I will join him in taking that number from the 18,235 employed by Doctor Tugwell's resettlement administration. I will join him in abolishing 175 of the 43,641 jobs under Mr. Hopkins. I will join him in removing that number from the 19,548 jobs under the HOLC, or the 2,422 jobs under the long interred NRA."

President Kemal

ANOTHER post-war treaty has gone flooey. President Kemal Ataturk of Turkey and his cabinet decided that the Dardanelles must be remilitarized, despite the Lusanne pact, and Turkish troops were promptly moved into the zone along the 75-mile long strait that connects the Sea of Marmora and the Aegean sea. It is believed Kemal will soon rebuild the fortifications in the zone which the allies failed to capture during the World war.

The Turkish dictator didn't surprise anyone by his action, for he asked permission of the League of Nations, some time ago to rearm the Dardanelles. No formal reply had been made, but the British government rather favored giving consent, and the Soviet union openly approves Turkey's move. Italy was displeased, and there was considerable excitement in the Balkan states, especially Bulgaria which borders on European Turkey. The Bulgarians renewed their demand for a corridor giving them a direct route to the Aegean sea.

Probably Kemal's action will not be severely condemned by anyone, for most of the European nations are preparing for war with feverish haste. Austria's army, small but well equipped, held a spring parade in Vienna, and immediately the nations of the little entente displayed their anger at this show of military force and their military attaches in the Austrian capital were ordered not to occupy the places reserved for them among the reviewing officials. Rumania has increased its military budget to $38,000,000 and created a special fund of $20,000,000 for the development of aviation. Hungary is clamoring for revision of the Trianon treaty and recovery of the territory it lost to the little entente.

The forty-seventh birthday of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler provided an opportunity for a big display of Germany's military power. As the dictator stood on a balcony overlooking the Wilhelmstrasse in Berlin nearly 15,000 soldiers of all arms, with motorized vehicles, passed before him, shouting renewal of their pledges of faith in Hitler. In many other cities of the reich there were like demonstrations.

GOV. ED. C. JOHNSON of Colorado is determined to keep "cheap labor" out of his state and has taken steps to stop the invaders at the boundary lines by means of a military patrol of the National Guard

Col. Neil W. Kimball, adjutant general, flew over western Oklahoma on a scouting expedition following reports workers were gathering for a concentrated "border run."

Guard officers said workers were camped across the state line in Oklahoma. Reports that indigents were evading the patrol along the New Mexico line by turning eastward sent patrol units hurrying to the Kansas boundary.

SEVEN persons were indicted by a federal grand jury in St. Paul, Minn., for the kidnaping of William Hamm, Jr., brewer, in June, 1933. Some of the accused are already in prison. Only one, Alvin Karpis, public enemy No. 1, is still at large, and the Department of Justice in Washington has offered a reward of $5,000 for information leading to his apprehension.

LOUIS McHENRY HOWE, secretary to President Roosevelt and for many years his close friend and adviser, died in the Naval hospital at Washington after an illness of more than a year. Mr. Howe was known in the capital as "the President maker," for it was largely due to his efforts that Mr. Roosevelt reached the White House. For twenty-five years, from the day when Mr. Roosevelt and he first met in Albany, he had devoted himself to forwarding his friend's political fortunes. During the Chicago convention and the ensuing campaign his planning and his advice were credited largely with the results attained.

Funeral services for Mr. Howe were held in the White House.

Break in Party Lines

Washington.—I suggested in these columns a year or more ago that the campaign of 1936 would bring forth some of the most amazing oddities in political alignments that this country had ever known. It was apparent, even during the battle for ballots in 1932, that a gigantic shake-up in the voting alignment of citizens was in the making. These things are now being demonstrated and more proof of the changing times seems just around the corner.

We all have seen how such outstanding figures as former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, the Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, have boldly flouted President Roosevelt and his New Deal theories and we have witnessed such vitriolic outbursts as those by former Senator James A. Reed, that old-line Missouri Democrat, and we have watched with interest the hauling and filling by Jeffersonian Democrats who find New Deal fantasies to be a bitter pill to swallow. Lately, there has come another most interesting situation respecting partisan alignment.

Although the action received much less attention than I believe it deserves, the determination of the Virginia Republicans in their recent convention at Roanoke to refrain from placing a Republican candidate in the field against Senator Carter Glass constitutes, to my mind, one of the most extraordinary twists ever to take place under our two party system. That convention, acting utterly without precedent, took the position that it was better to leave the field clear for the election of the veteran senator than to precipitate a political battle by naming a Republican candidate.

The reason for the action of the Virginia Republicans is quite clear in one way. They felt that Carter Glass, although a life-long Democrat who has carried on his share of bombardment of Republican principles and policies, could do the country more good from their standpoint than could be attained by placing a Republican candidate against him without chance of success. To state this premise in another way: Carter Glass does not swallow the New Deal as a whole and when he finds objectionable features in the Roosevelt program, he is independent enough and has the strength of character to voice his feelings. Doing this as a member of the majority party in the senate necessarily has more weight than all of the criticism of the New Deal that could be voiced by a Republican—if one could be elected in Virginia—and the Virginia convention chose a course which it believed would best serve the nation as a whole.

But it is the circumstance of a party convention refusing to engage in battle that interests me most. Under such circumstances, the old idea of party loyalty becomes not only illogical but ridiculous. Instead of a call to battle, we see what amounts to a call for support of a theoretical opponent. Of course, in the opinion of many, Carter Glass is the outstanding exponent of conservative thought in the Democratic party and if he speaks for conservative thought in the Democratic party he is almost speaking for conservative thought in the Republican party. It is easy to see, therefore, why the Virginia Republicans adopted the course they did but where does that leave party loyalty? What does it mean as to the future alignment of political thought?

On the Other Hand

The course followed by the Virginia Republicans is not more strange than the action of President Roosevelt himself who has indorsed Senator Hiram Johnson of California and Senator George Norris of Nebraska, with almost boyish enthusiasm. Senator Johnson and Senator Norris have not been regarded as regular Republicans but they have been flying the Republican banner for a good many years. Yet, the President verbally pats them on the back and offers his blessing.

During the same period, we have watched Mr. Roosevelt playing touch-and-go with the La Follettes in Wisconsin. Of course, the La Follettes catalogue themselves as Progressives but they never have had a great deal in common with old-line Democrats.

Likewise, in the senate if one is to believe gossip frequently bandied about, Senator McNary of Oregon, the titular Republican leader, has been only half-heartedly fighting the New Deal. In fact, some of Senator McNary's own colleagues claim that he has really given aid and comfort to their political enemies.

In the meantime, one can wander around the halls of congress and hear private observations from men who were supposed to be stalwart partisans that they have been unable to determine yet what their course ought to be. One of them remarked confidentially to me that he believed he would have to consult a clairvoyant before he could say whether he was going to support the New Deal or oppose it or try to straddle the fence. Of course, his remark was in a humorous vein but it epitomized the thought and, I may say, the worry of a very great many partisans at this time.

So, we have a picture six months ahead of the actual casting of the ballots in which party lines are torn asunder for countless hundreds of more or less important party figures. I think everyone agrees that the condition comes from the development of New Deal principles and policies under the leadership of President Roosevelt. There will be many who are now doubtful as to their course who will realign themselves with the New Deal because they were originally Democrats and there will be many who will again follow the Republican banner down the stretch. But it seems to me that three years of Roosevelt probably have established a greater segment of independent voting strength in this country than had resulted from a quarter of a century of partisan politics before. The situation must be construed then as indicating that hereafter those who stick definitely in party harness will continue to stand hitched because they have political aspirations and ambitions or because economic conditions in their communities are better fostered by the party with which they have aligned themselves.

'Quoddy Dream Dropped

At last, after almost two years of promotion work, President Roosevelt has abandoned two of his cherished dreams: harnessing the tides of Passamaquoddy bay in Maine and construction of a gigantic canal across Florida. The 'Quoddy project designed to produce electric power in quantities never before turned out, was to cost $40,000,000. The great job of excavating a slit across the face of the state of Florida to let ships go direct from the Atlantic to the Gulf without going around the toe of the state was to cost $150,000,000.

Only a small amount, that is, a small sum compared to other New Deal expenditures, had been wasted on the ship canal plans before it was tossed into the limbo of forgotten things, but something like $10,000,000 already has been used in the attempt to make the moon work through the medium of the tides of 'Quoddy bay. Both projects can be charged up to politics and experiments and probably the country will be better off to take the loss and avoid the use of further money.

The President fully intended to go through with his plans respecting these two projects until he ran into vicious opposition in congress. Too many representatives and senators realized that they were going to have the names 'Quoddy bay and Florida canal hurled at them through the coming campaign if they voted their approval by including additional funds for these projects in the relief appropriations. I don't know what is going to become of the homes, the model city, erected for workers near the 'Quoddy bay project. Photographs of this village indicate it to be a community of which any resident might be proud. It was constructed to assure the workers on the 'Quoddy project a comfortable place in which to live. They still have the comfortable place in which to live because the government still owns the homes but what is to become of those people and what disposition is to be made of the property is something else again.

Faced Difficulties

Most engineers have contended that it was impossible to place in the bay equipment that could function satisfactorily while at the same time producing electric curernt at a rate that would bring a return on the tremendous investment necessary. Further than that, no one yet has been able to show where so much electric energy could be marketed. The territory is sparsely settled and the industrial production is small. While it was contended that limitless power would bring industries into that section, the indications were, even after actual work started, for only a small increment in the number of factories and other users of energy.

The 'Quoddy power idea probably was the most fascinating and most romantic of anything proposed by the New Deal for the purpose of creating jobs. Like the proposed Florida ship canal, it held potentialities but those whose opinions heretofore have been sound remain unconvinced that either the power plan or the canal for a short cut across Florida ever could repay the government for money spent there.

New York's Titterton murder mystery turns out not to be "the perfect crime."

The murderer, an upholsterer, carefully took away the cord used in his trade, with which he had bound the unfortunate woman, but forgot that he had left some strands of twine under the body, and those pieces of cord, thanks to excellent police work, trapped him. The sentimental who say, "Give the poor criminal another chance," will note that the murderer was a convict on parole when he killed the woman. He had "another chance" and made use of it.

Berlin reports a great Hitler forty-seventh bithday celebration including a fine display of military power—airplanes, war tanks, fighting men, apparently eager for a fight. They were young and could not remember the last war.

Particularly interesting were two lines in the song sung by storm troopers:

"Today we own Germany,
And tomorrow the whole world."

The day after Hitler celebrated his forty-seventh birthday old Rome celebrated her two thousand six hundred and eighty-ninth anniversary. Mussolini celebrates by launching two new Italian cruisers and speeding up airplane production. He tells Italian fathers and mothers he must have 60,000,000 population for Italy not later than 1950. In 1921, when Mussolini took charge, Italy's population was 38,000,000. There will soon be room and food to raise more Italians in Ethiopia. Easy for all but the mother.

England, doing well in a business way, with more than $2,000,000,000 worth of Bank of England notes circulating among tradesmen, is collecting gold and depleting the French reserves. While England tries to keep down the price of her "no-gold" pound, France is afraid she will not be able to keep up the value of her gold franc, already devalued by 80 per cent of its 1914 value. What becomes of the "magic of gold?" Our dear old dollar is worth only 59 cents, and only dealers in exchange know it.

Doctor Benedict, of Carnegie laboratories, finds that the adult elephant's heart beats from 22 to 30 times a minute, less than half the human heartbeat, and the elephant heartbeat is nine strokes faster when the animal is lying down. Man's heart beats more rapidly while he stands—because then it must raise blood the full height of the body. Old poets, with tired hearts, should do their writing lying down—the blood flows horizontally with little effort.

England is pleased; Sir Robert Hadfield, who makes tough steel, announces a shell for British naval guns that can pass unhurt through armor plate twelve inches thick and explode on the other side. "One shell of this kind fired in the region of the magazine would probably cause destruction of a modern battleship." England is manufacturing the shells rapidly; others are manufacturing airplane bombs that might make old-fashioned naval guns and shells useless.

In Miami, a lady, first name Lois, and married, has husky triplet babies. Two gentlemen, the official husband and another, demand custody of the triplets, each calling himself the real father. The alleged "father" who is not the husband would submit to any blood test, his lawyer says.

How would King Solomon decide that?

Clarence Darrow, one of the country's most convincing lawyers, says on his seventy-ninth birthday:

"I say that religion is the belief in future life and in God. I don't believe in either."

The hoptoad beside the track, watching the express train go by, might say, reasonably enough:

"I do not believe in such a thing as a locomotive engineer."

Moscow has returned to the Japanese government in Manchukuo, with full military honors, the bodies of three Japanese killed in a fight with Soviet guards. The military honors will not console the widows, and, repeated often enough, such incidents lead to war.

Europe envies our fortunate country, which gives only paper dollars and inflation paper bonds to its citizens but has buried in the ground, the biggest lump of gold on earth.

Farm Jurors Don't Know Hay Baler; Judge Asks Picture

Attorney Paul O. Cooper, representing a client in Fairmont, Minn., suing for damages allegedly suffered in a collision between an automobile and a hay baler, thought the jury of 12 farmers knew about hay balers. But they told Judge J. E. Haycraft they had never seen one, although much hay is raised hereabouts. Then it developed Attorney Cooper couldn't describe one either, so Judge Haycraft told him to bring a picture.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, a likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter for his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. On the way to Montauk, where he intended to disappear, he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder.

"What's the answer if he don't?"

"The answer then is that a noble young fellow, named John Clarke Ridder — and that's me — gets a whole lot interested in an unfortunate guy named Jay Rogers. Why? Because he believes him to be innocent—that's why. And, don't make any mistake, a guy like Ridder believing it's going to start a lot of other people believing it, too. I write my mother that I've got to have money to carry on the fight, and I get it, because the old man decides I can't be so bad, after all. Maybe he gets his newspaper into the scrap — not for his own son, which wouldn't help much, but for a stranger. Whether that happens or not, I'll get a job and a lawyer, and use 'em both for you. I'll use all the family influence for you. And, when it's over, and your husband's acquitted, I'll be in some position to talk to the old man for you."

"What if he isn't acquitted?"

"You've got to face that chance, either way."

Peggy looked at him with hard eyes.

"You're a pretty smart fellow," she said. "Pretty smart—if you can talk me into keeping my mouth shut while you get the money, and the position, and everything my husband ought to have."

"Will he get it if I don't? Use your nut, Peggy. What do I gain? If you spill the beans tonight, what good does it do you? And what harm does it do me? Maybe I go to jail for a few weeks. But it don't get your husband out of jail, does it? This way might, and it's the only way. Think it over."

"Will you answer me one question?" the girl asked.

"Shoot."

"If you've nothing to gain, why are you doing this?"

The Duke had been pacing the room. He stopped short now, and his clenched hands fell limp at his sides.

"Damned if I know," he responded. "And that's the truth."

They could hear the clock ticking in the hall.

Then it struck two.

"All right," Peggy said, at last. "I'm going to play it your way. Where do we go from here?"

"I think you'd better go to bed," the Duke answered.

"Here?"

"Why not?" grinned the Duke. "You've got a whole lot more right here than I have. There's a guestroom that Willetts always keeps ready."

The girl hesitated.

"What time can I get back to New York?" she asked.

"There's a good train around nine o'clock."

"All right."

Barry opened a door the other side of the library, and switched on the lights. "There you are," he said.

"All right."

"It just struck me," he remarked. "You don't suppose your husband might have given his real name?"

"No. But that's one reason I want to get back. You better come with me, too. I think you're on the level, but I'm not so sure Jack's going to think so."

"O. K.," Barry assented. "Breakfast at eight. Good night, Mrs. Rogers."

"Good night, Mr. Ridder."

She smiled, a wan ghost of a smile.

Standing before the dying fire, Barry exclaimed: "What a damned fool I am!" and stuffed the letter into his pocket. The newspaper lay before him, and, with it, he came back to the hearth. "Let's see what it's all about," he said.

The story filled the first page, and overflowed onto the second and third. Judge Hambidge's eagerly-awaited decision was crowded into an upper corner of the fourth page, with a two-column picture of the Judge. There was no editorial comment. Evidently, there hadn't been time for that yet. "For some unexplained reason," the paper said, "the murder was not reported to the police until nearly noon." The body had been found by the Filipino servant shortly after eight that morning. Mike Kelly's skull had been fractured by a single blow with a heavy cut-glass whiskey decanter that lay close by, its contents still undisturbed. There was no sign of a struggle.

The Filipino boy's yarn was straight enough. Kelly had come home just before eleven o'clock. He was a little drunk, the boy admitted. He had let himself in with his latch-key, and gone straight to the dining room, where he rang violently. The boy had responded, and got out the liquor and the glasses. Then a young man had called. His name was Rogers, the boy remembered, and he said he had known Kelly in Palm Beach. Kelly had said, "All right; show him into the drawing room," and the boy had done so, and brought in the tray. Then he had gone back downstairs.

A little while later, he had heard angry voices in the drawing room, and had listened outside, in the hall. What he had heard was pretty much what the girl had repeated, but there were a few additions, in the way of threats from the visitor. The Filipino decided that it was none of his business, and returned to his room. Ten minutes later, anxious in spite of himself, he remounted the back stairs. As he reached the top, he heard the drawing room door closed noisily, and saw the caller hurry into the hall and through the front door, which he banged after him. It was then nearly midnight. The Filipino had been on duty since seven that morning, and, reassured, he tiptoed down the stairs, and went to bed. That was all he knew until, eight hours later, he came upon Mike Kelly's body lying face-down on the floor.

The Duke was just about to go to bed himself, when he noticed a small headline. "Artist's Wife Crushed by Taxi." That would be the accident that upset Judge Hambidge.

"I might talk to Winslow at the Hambidges," he thought, sleepily. "But I guess Peggy's right. Better see Jack first. I've got a date with Winslow at his office on Monday."

The hall clock struck three.

Nevertheless, the Duke was up an hour before breakfast.

He shaved, and bathed, and tossed a few things into an overnight bag he'd seen in the closet. Emerging, he ran into Willetts.

"Breakfast for two," the Duke ordered. "Mrs. Rogers and I are taking the 9:27 to New York."

He thought the butler looked at him sharply.

As their train left Southampton, Peggy looked even shabbier in her cheap black dress and her little red beret. Her face was very white, for want of make-up or sleep. "It's funny," she said awkwardly, "but I sort of feel that everything's going to be all right now."

"Why don't you and the boy move out here?"

"To stay, you mean?"

"Sure. I can square it with Willetts. Come along, the end of the week, Peggy. After all, it's where you belong, you know."

"I belong with Jack," she said. "And, anyway, has it struck you that the old man might come back unexpected? He's been mad six years. What's he going to do when he finds out about all this?"

"Well," Barry hazarded, "if we've got his son out—"

"He won't care," Peggy interrupted, her voice again hard and pitiful. "He never did.

"He smashed Jack's fiddle. Jack wanted to be a violinist. He could've been, too. But the old man found he was taking lessons. 'I don't want any jazz-banders in my family,' he snorted. 'You're going to take my place when I die.'

"That started it. He'd always been hard on Jack. Bossy, the old man is. And you can't boss Jack. He got another fiddle. He was good on it, too. When he went up to Harvard, he used to play it at parties.

"When his father heard about that, he threatened to cut off Jack's allowance. So Jack stopped fiddling, and began to drink. And, one night when he was awful drunk, he wrote the old man's name on a check. He tried to get it back the next day, but the bank had turned it down, and the guy he'd given it to was sore, and had Jack arrested.

"Jack had sold his second fiddle to make good. He never got another one. The old man cut Jack loose. He came up to Boston, with a newspaper that printed the story in his hands. Cold as ice, he was. 'You've disgraced me,' he said, 'and you'll go on disgracing me, if I'll let you. I won't. You can go where you like and do what you please, but not with my name. If you ever use that again, you can starve.'"

Peggy turned to the window.

Then, abruptly, "How are we going to get in to see him?" she asked.

"You're his wife," Barry answered.

"And you?"

"I'm his friend. And my name's Ridder."

Even Peggy's story didn't quite prepare the Duke for that meeting with his other self.

He'd rather expected to see one of those weaklings who find the world a vast conspiracy against them.

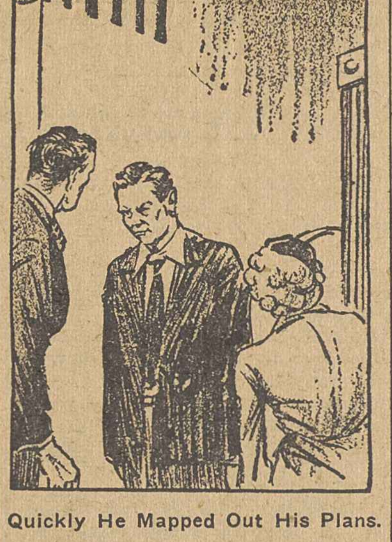
John Clarke Ridder, Jr., proved to be merely a frightened youngster. A slim, rather frail lad in his early twenties, with soft, dark hair, and large, dark eyes, and a peculiarly sensitive mouth. His hands were soft and sensitive, too, but there was nothing effeminate about the boy. "Gee, I'am glad to see you, Peg," he blurted out. "I was getting a little bit worried."

Peggy's presence reassured him. Evidently, he counted on her, and felt safe while she was with him.

"Jack," she said, quietly and significantly, "I've brought your friend, Mr. Ridder. He's going to help us."

"That's great," he observed.

Fortunately for them, the guard had other things on his mind. He kept disappearing, and coming back, and looking away from them to a paper that someone had given him, and that seemed irritating. In a low voice, Peg outlined what had happened, and the conclusion that had been reached.



Quickly He Mapped Out His Plans.

The boy turned to Barry.

Young, frightened, and soft, he could reason quickly, and talk straight.

"I don't understand," he said to the Duke. "If these people will do things for you, because they think you're Jack Ridder, why won't they do 'em for me, when they know I'm Jack Ridder?"

"Because they like me. They've never met you. And because my record's clear. I'm not accused of murder under circumstances that—well, they don't sound pretty, at first, do they?"

"They do not."

"And, of course, there's your mother."

The sensitive mouth tightened.

Barry gave him the letter he had shown Peggy.

The lad read it.

"The old man's got her buffaloed," he remarked; "same as he's got everybody else. O. K. I wouldn't have used my own name, anyway. Letting you use it's another thing, but Peggy thinks you're straight, and she's never been wrong yet. It's a queer game, but I'll sit in. What next?"

Barry was relieved. The guard had been showing his paper to a colleague. Quickly, he mapped out his plans—so far as he had any. "I've got a date with Peter Winslow on Monday. And I'm going to cable your mother — for money. We've got to have that. I hope to get a job pretty soon, and make my own way, but, just now, there's less than a hundred and fifty dollars in the kitty, and I'm going to give most of that to Peggy for current expenses. You'd better write your mother, too—the kind of a letter you'd write in answer to that, if you were in my shoes. I'll bring you the stationery, and, of course, I'll mail your letter from Southampton. We'll have to smuggle it out of here, I suppose. Now, tell me exactly what happened the night before last."

The story differed very little from the one Barry had heard, but it was full of shrewd questions that hadn't occurred to him.

"Did you ever see Kelly?"

"No."

"He was enormous. Must have been six-feet-two in his stockings. I'm five-feet-five in mine. I'd've had to stand on a chair to hit him on top of the head."

"Unless he was sitting in one."

"The body wasn't anywhere near a chair. It was up against the door to the hall. The paper says so. The Filipino got in through the dining room. I got out through the hall door. He saw me. How did I do that, if Kelly was lying against it?"

"I don't know."

"Two more things: The lights were burning full tilt when I left. I could see Kelly's shadow on the blinds as I passed the house on my way home. Were they still burning when the butler came in the next morning! And, if not, who turned 'em out?"

"What's the other item?"

The other item's the crux of the whole business," Jack answered. "Mike rushed me out because the phone rang, and the fellow that rang it was coming over to talk to him. Did he come? If not, why not? And if that fellow did come, isn't it likely that he's the guy that killed Kelly?"

CHAPTER IV

IT WAS long after one o'clock when they walked out of the Tombs.

Peggy was all in now. Barry splurged on a taxi to take her "home" to the dingy boarding house where the disowned Ridders lived, in the upper Forties. In spite of her protests, Barry kept his word as to giving her most of that hundred and fifty. "It isn't mine," he declared.

"We'll eat together Monday, after I've talked to Winslow. I'll be around about six o'clock."

It was two now—a warmish Saturday afternoon. Nearly forty-eight hours before he could hope to find the attorney. Any inexpensive hotel would do. He registered at one a few blocks from Peggy's. "Barry Gilbert," he wrote.

From his new residence, Barry went to the Astor, and cabled Mrs. Ridder.

The message read:

"Making good stop water-wagon and on track of a job stop friend of mine met in Florida locked up for murder didn't commit stop can you arrange credit here up to two thousand dollars stop won't use unless necessary for friend and will return every penny stop wire Peter Winslow lawyer for confirmation if desired stop this is my big chance to do something worth while stop writing details all's well don't hurry back love. John."

"I'll need that two thousand quick," Barry thought. "Winslow'll want a retainer, and there'll be a lot of other things." Barry wondered what to do with his forty-eight hours. "I'll stroll down to Kelly's place," he decided, "and give it the once-over."

From Sixth avenue, he turned into Sixteenth street, and stopped before what the tabloids were calling "the scene of the murder." It was an old-fashioned red-brick house, with a bay window, and a heavy front door. A policeman stood guard, and a group of curious loiterers as near as they dared.

Remarkable, Barry thought, how people could stand staring at anything connected with a tragedy.

There was another little group at the corner, where workmen were putting in a new traffic light standard. Broken off short, its predecessor lay on the pavement. Having nothing better to do, Barry asked, "What's the excitement?"

"Taxi smash."

"When?"

"Just before two o'clock yesterday morning. Killed a woman. Crushed her right up against that post. Broke it off short. Don't seem possible."

No wonder the Judge was "upset."

Curious, Barry thought, these two violent deaths within a few yards and a few hours of each other. Curious, too, that the Judge's stroll should have brought him so near the house in which Kelly lay murdered, but no more remarkable than the series of events that had involved Barry in the whole affair. "Life's full of coincidences," Barry mused. "It's only in fiction that people pay much attention to 'em. Winslow said the Judge went for a walk, and that's the simplest explanation of the whole matter.

He was at the attorney's office before ten o'clock on Monday morning. He was ushered into the pleasantly furnished corner room that was Peter's. The lawyer rose, as Barry entered, and came forward, one hand outstretched, and the other holding a newspaper. "The early bird, eh?"

Watching Fishes Beneficial

Watching the rhythmic movements of fishes and the rippling undulations of submarine plant life is beneficial to the overwrought nerves of patients, say the doctors. Dietitians agree that fish are as soothing to the senses when alive as they are supposed to be good for the brain when boiled.—Pearson's Weekly.

Lice Bother to Heifers, Calves

Early Attention Is Advised to Save Animals From Losing Weight.

By Fred M. Haig, Associate Professor of Animal Husbandry and Dairying, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service.

Cattle lice are a serious handicap to the development of calves and heifers.

When infested with lice, the young animals rub against posts and trees, wearing away their hair and inflaming their skin. Sometimes the calves become thin and weak from loss of weight.

In the early spring dairymen should inspect their calves to see whether they are infested with lice.

The insects are found mostly around the necks and shoulders of the animals, but they also infest other parts of the body.

The first step in eradicating lice is to clean and disinfect the stalls thoroughly. After removing the bedding and sweeping the stalls, disinfect them with a 5 per cent solution of any good coal tar disinfectant.

Allow the stalls to dry, then whitewash the interior. When the whitewash is dry place plenty of straw bedding or other clean material in the stalls.

Meanwhile, apply to the calves a solution of one ounce of sodium fluoride in a gallon of water. Brush it in thoroughly so that it will reach every part of the body and penetrate loose folds of skin.

Tie the animals in a sunny place, protected from drafts, until they are dry. The calves are then ready to be placed back in the newly disinfected stalls and a second treatment will hardly be necessary unless they become infested again from other animals.

Good Plan to Let Garden Spot Rest for One Year

Since home gardens are generally maintained on the same spot year after year, liberal applications of manure should be given each fall and turned under to maintain fertility. When this is done the manure will be rotted by spring and if plowed again in spring this new and rich plant food will be readily available for the vegetable crop. If the manure has not been applied in the fall, then rotted manure can be applied in the spring, or a light dressing of chicken or sheep manure can be given, even after the crops are planted. Twenty-five tons of stable manure to the acre, preferably cow manure, will keep garden soil in good condition, according to a writer in the Missouri Farmer.

Many farmers believe that too much chicken manure has been applied to farm gardens. Of all manures, chicken manure is richest and, lacking in bulk as compared with cow or horse manure mixed with straw, it does not leave the soil in as loose condition as is desirable. Too heavy applications, as every farmer knows, will cause the plants to burn if the weather is dry.

What would do many farm gardens a lot of good would be one year's rest with the plot sowed to red clover. If for one year the garden vegetables could be raised on a different plot of ground, the old plot sown to red clover with the crop plowed under, a vast improvement in richness and looseness of soil would be the result.

Corn Smut

Corn smut is a fungus and is carried over from one year to another on old stalks, on fodder, in manure and probably also in the soil. Since the disease is not seed borne, seed treatment is useless. The collection of the smutted ears and stalks before the spores are spread will help greatly to control the trouble if it can be done. The use of smut infected manure should be avoided, and the corn crop should be rotated so as not to occur on the same land oftener than once in three or more years.

Fighting Rams of Texas

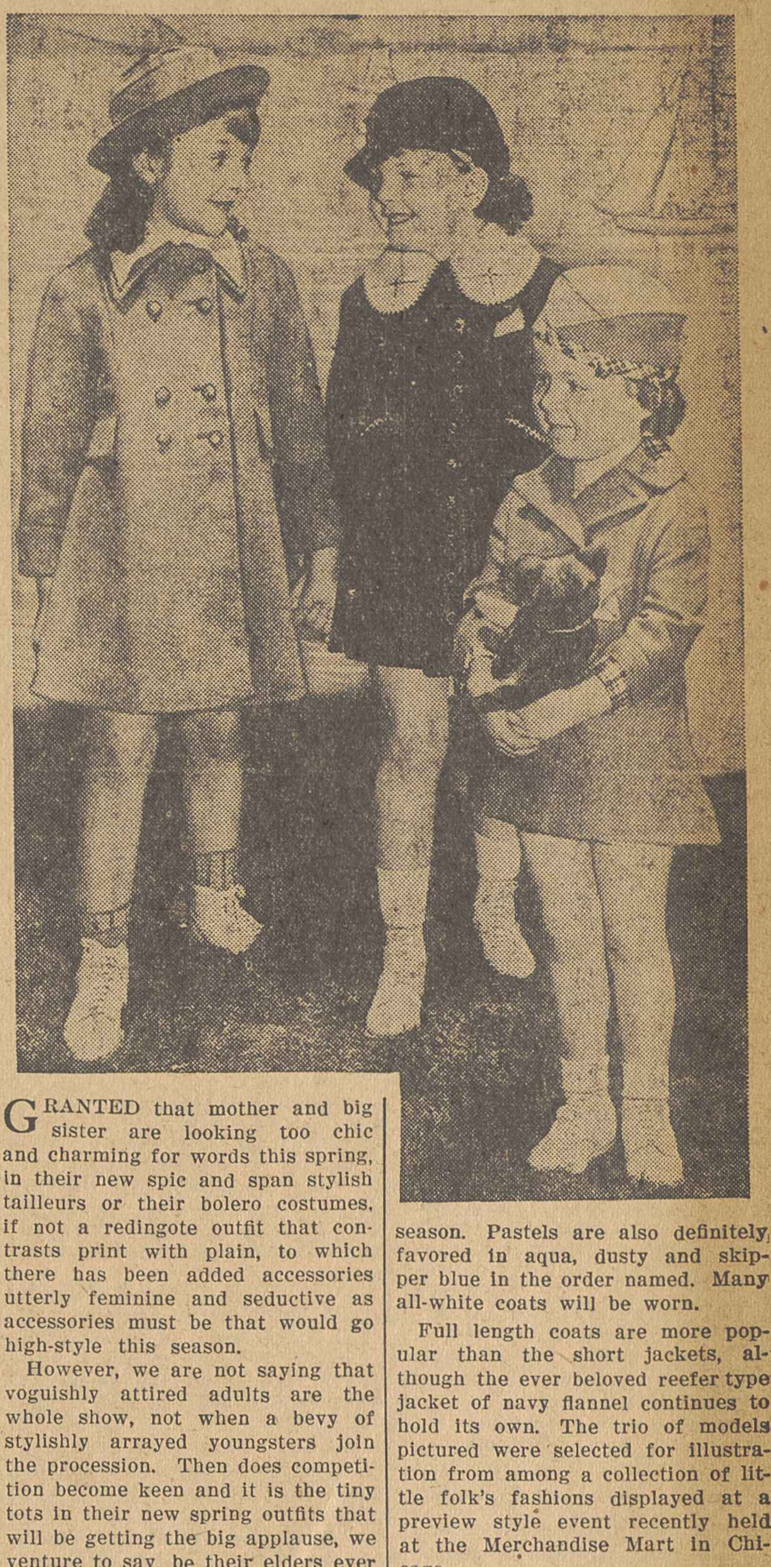
A curb on the fighting instincts of rival rams has recently been devised by Texan sheepmen. It consists of a rubber screen attached to the animal's horns and allowed to drop down over the upper line of its vision. While the ram can then see well enough to graze, it cannot see other leaders of the flock clearly enough for an efficient battle. Known as "combat blinds," the blinkers are widely used throughout the sheep country of western Texas, where rival rams now graze side by side in security and peace.—New York Times.

Age to Breed Mares

As a general practice, farm mares should not be bred until they are three years old, and if it is necessary to work them hard it might be best not to breed them until they are four years old. Some well developed purebred mares are bred as two-year-olds, notes a writer in the Missouri Farmer, but they are seldom worked while suckling their foals. On the other hand, it is not advisable to let mares get too old before they are bred or they may never raise colts.

Hats to Match Top Juvenile Coats

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



GRANTED that mother and big sister are looking too chic and charming for words this spring, in their new spic and span stylish tailleurs or their bolero costumes, if not a redingote outfit that contrasts print with plain, to which there has been added accessories utterly feminine and seductive as accessories must be that would go high-style this season.

However, we are not saying that voguishly attired adults are the whole show, not when a bevy of stylishly arrayed youngsters join the procession. Then does competition become keen and it is the tiny tots in their new spring outfits that will be getting the big applause, we venture to say, be their elders ever so beguilingly garbed. Which they should for children's fashions are as cunning and intriguing as fancy dare picture this season.

As a fashion "first" for spring it is the little coat-and-hat ensemble that is taking precedent at the immediate moment. It adds zest to the mode that children's coats are unusually versatile this season in the matter of styling. Then, too, a particularly wide choice of materials is offered. Tweeds in delectable colorings, camel's hair weaves, navy twills, novelty wool plaids and serge are all-important in the list of juvenile coatings.

Close attention is being paid to tailoring and styling, with the English trend dominating. Inverted pleats, crisp collars, velvet pipings as well as insets in tailored collars are high style details to consider. Most important to remember is that fashion decrees that every wee coat or suit is to be companioned by a matching hat.

While grown-ups are going in for daring color to the limit, high colors are not so much in the children's wear picture. As a matter of fact, it is the medium tones that are most generally in use this season. Pastels are also definitely favored in aqua, dusty and skipper blue in the order named. Many all-white coats will be worn.

Full length coats are more popular than the short jackets, although the ever beloved reefer type jacket of navy flannel continues to hold its own. The trio of models pictured were selected for illustration from among a collection of little folk's fashions displayed at a preview style event recently held at the Merchandise Mart in Chicago.

The clever little coat to the left is one of the new and very much admired Princess Elizabeth types. It carries that convincing air of distinction such as every fashion-alert mother covets for her child. Tweed in the popular dusty rose shade fashions it. Cunningly flared lines, the double breast button fastening, and the deftly tailored details of collar, cuffs and pockets are all significant style items. The collar of natural linen is detachable.

The little girl walking hand-in-hand so chummily with her companion has on a very attractive long reefer coat in navy blue. White metal buttons and a white hand-embroidered lingerie collar add chic finishing touches. The perky matching hat is of cloth identical with that of the coat.

The adorable child in the foreground has on a coat of skipper blue novelty weave wool with the Princess Elizabeth lines given to it that are regarded so exceedingly smart for the younger set this spring. Her matching Scotch cap repeats the trim of blue plaid silk used on the coat.

MULTI-DUTY GARB URGED FOR SPRING

There's a lot of talk these days about the "basic wardrobe," which is a good idea for the spring budgeteer.

The idea is to select the spring suit, coat and printed frocks in one color theme, to be worn with interchangeable accessories. Suppose, for instance, you start with one of the smart new man-tailored suits with black jacket and striped skirt. With it, if you shop wisely, you will get an extra skirt to match the jacket.

Then you should choose a topcoat in tailored style, also black, which may be worn over the suit or with a printed silk frock.

Your printed silks should be bright, gay and simply made, so that you may wear various frilly lingerie accents with them, changing their mood with the jabot or collar you select. With these for a foundation, you may achieve endless variety by choice of contrasting accessories.

New Hats Make Striking Use of Ostrich Feathers

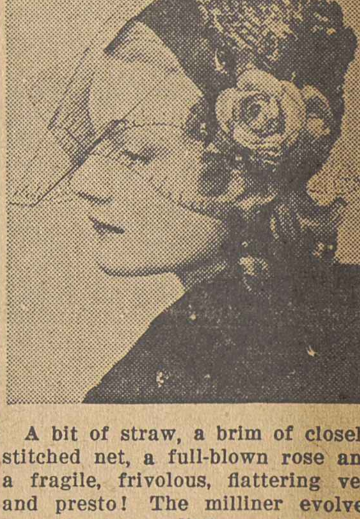
Ostrich feathers and gay flowers add the striking effects to new hats.

Black straw bonnets, dipped in a peak over the forehead, are encircled with ostrich feathers curled over one ear or trimmed with bright, shiny flowers perched along the brim.

Veils are an outstanding feature, consisting of coarse, stiff, black mesh, sometimes fashioned in a circular cut extending down to fasten under the chin.

WITH A VEIL

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



A bit of straw, a brim of closely stitched net, a full-blown rose and a fragile, frivolous, flattering veil and presto! The milliner evolves as seductive a little cocktail hat as the world e'er gazed upon. As here pictured this intriguing headpiece is posed by Helen Chandler, who wears it in her newest play. It carries a highly important style message in the tight brim that frames the head, namely, the use of many layers of net closely stitched. Milliners are making many wide-brimmed hats as well as turbans and toques of stitched net this season.

Style Tips

Handbags are all big and roomy.

Belts these days show striking designs.

A charming sports set of hat and scarf are made of white pique.

Felt, once confined to hats, is promoted to the realm of clothes.

"WHY AND WHITHER?" TIME TO OVERHAUL

Heretofore The Times has ventured the assertion that a proper solution of Alabama's government problems should be approached and made through the adoption of a new State Constitution, drafted in conformity with present-day needs and demands. We realize that the subject of a new Constitution is one that may meet the disapproval of some political groups, which fact we accept as one of the most convincing reasons that it is what the State of Alabama needs.

However, we are not the only one thinking in the direction of a new State Constitution as the remedy for our ills.

Under the very fitting caption, "Why and Whither?" the Birmingham Realty Company, in an advertisement in The Birmingham News last Sunday, proceeds directly and pointedly to a conclusion which, in our opinion, truthfully says: "The cumbersome and patched together machinery of Alabama's government can not creak on forever with only emergency repairs. Some time, somehow, means must be found to overhaul the ship of state from stem to stern."

Leading up ot this conclusion, the statement of the realty company gives a brief survey of what proved a futile effort by the last legislature toward finding out what should be done to properly set our state's business in order. We quote the article in full below:

"In the final days of the last legislative session a resolution was introduced by Senator James Simpson, of Jefferson, which provided that:

> "A committee of ten members be appointed—three from the Senate, three from the House and four resident citizens of Alabama not members of the Legislature — to study the organization and functioning of state and local government in Alabama, to compile data with respect thereto, and to formulate recommendations for such changes therein looking to the betterment of its various services to the state. This resolution provided further that the committee should file a report of its findings not later than December 1st, 1937.

" By a tie vote of 15 to 15 this resolution was defeated in the Senate at the closing sessions.

"The question that arises in the public mind is—WHY? Why should 15 senators vote against a resolution which provides for an impartial and unbiased study of state affairs? Were they possibly afraid that such a study would develop facts unfavorable to their own political machine?

"To prevent opposition to the bill it was definitely fixed that there would be no salaries and no patronage. Sponsors of the resolution felt that funds might be obtained from the Rockefeller Foundation or some similar organization for an educational study; that Yale University Law School or some other law school would cooperate with the University of Alabama Law School in a study of Alabama jurisprudence, and that other funds could be obtained from citizens interested in good government, without a penny's cost to the State of Alabama.

"Before the resolution was introduced, Dr. L. N. Duncan, president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, and J. A. Keller, Superintendent of Education, both approved it and agreed to place the facilities of their respective agencies at the command of the committee.

"And yet the resolution went down before the adverse votes of that same faction of the Legislature which has insistently demanded increased taxes and turned its back on every plea for measures of economy.

"Does this end steps to give Alabama an efficient government such as so many of her sister states are now enjoying? The cumbersome and patched together machinery of Alabama's government can not creak on forever with only emergency repairs. Some time, somehow, means must be found to overhaul the ship of state from stem to stern."

We can not admit that "this ends steps to give Alabama an efficient government." The people of Alabama will not be willing to admit it. Our people are far from satisfied or content with our State's public affairs. Patchwork in the form of emergency repairs has gotten our business out of proportion in many places. In some cases it has literally put the cart before the horse and made the porch bigger than the house.

Foremost among the things with which we are not satisfied is our educational matters. The people of Alabama, we believe, will not be content to rest on their oars until public education is recognized and amply provided for as one of the necessary and paramount functions of our government.

In order to get to that place with our schools it is clear that the only safe and sufficient course is to find a means "to overhaul the ship of state from stem to stern." And that should be done, not by more patchwork, but by building a new state Constitution.

Correction of deficiencies and discrepancies in constitutional provisions for schools is but one of the important things the overhauling should provide. We have amended and amended until the Constitution is out of balance. Further amendment and patchwork would add to the creaking of the machine.

If Alabama will lay aside politics long enough to allow a representation of statesmen and business men time to set up a modern State Constitution to meet the needs of public education and other necessary and important functions of the State, we can then, and only then, feel that we are unshackled and free to face the future course of progress that lies before us.

A new State Constitution can be made, adopted, and put into operation for what one do-nothing session of the legislature cost—if it is done according to business procedure with political factions subordinated and wire-pulling eliminated.

HIGHWAY WORK HIGH

Mr. Reese Harvey, office engineer of the State Highway Department, announced Saturday that contracted highway and bridge construction work to cost $7,015,976 and giving employment to 10,200 men was under way in Alabama on April 1.

Including the various three-way projects financed by federal, state and county governments, the total amount under construction on April 1 was $11,000,000, Mr. Harvey said.

In 1935 a total of $8,431,565 was spent on road and bridge work in the state.

Harvey reported that Alabama's federal aid highway system contained 3, 934 miles, of which 2,074 are paved, 1,751 are graveled, topsoil, chert or sand-clay surfaced; 17 graded and drained, and 92 unimproved.

Alabama, it seems from the above report, has been and is yet in one of the boom periods of road and highway construction.

Contrast this with a statement that would set out the truth of our public education status. Schools closed, cut short of the stipulated term, which if carried out in full would have been too short. School teachers idle, disturbed and uncertain about their own economic freedom, and disappointed with the half-way methods they have been forced to apply in their work.

College professors are unable to take part in civic affairs as they desire, because they are having to work without pay to keep the higher institutions going.

In this we see another glaring instance of our state's affairs badly out of balance. Highway work booming at its peak, and education floundering in the most dismal fog it has ever experienced.

Public education is as important as any other function of government. If we did not have educated people, we would not know how to build highways, and in fact, would not need to build them. There are many functions of government that are secondary to public education.

COLLEGE AUDITORIUM

"Recently Barnum Brown, a distinguished curator of the American Museum of Natural History in New York, lectured before the student body of Alabama College at Montevallo," said Harold Fisher. "Mr. Brown has a national reputation as a speaker and has lectured extensively in many parts of the United States. So impressed was he with the auditorium at Montevallo that he inquired the names of the architects of the building, and wrote them a letter stating that it is the most perfect hall in which he had spoken in America. He also asked for some information about the proportions of the building and the treatment giving such fine acoustic effect. The architects for the building, Warren, Knight and Davis, Birmingham, and Dr. Harman, president of Alabama College, were very much gratified at this expression of appreciation from such an authority. This auditorium has frequently been admired by people of Alabama who are pleased to see it given more national recognition." —Views and Interviews, in The Birmingham News.

RE-ELECT HUGH WHITE

The Advocate makes no pretense of being a moulder of public opinion, being content to function as a dispenser of news pertinent to Greenville and Butler County. Rarely do we take up the cudgels for a candidate for any office, as long as the fight remains within the confines of the Democratic party.

However, we deviate slightly from our usual custom to urge the re-election of Hugh White as president of the Alabama Public Service Commission. This is the most important office to be filled at the coming primary in which there is opposition.

Mr. White is trained and experienced in the work of the Commission, and has proven his loyalty to the interests of the people of Alabama. His opponent may be thoroughly competent and capable. Of that we can not say, but we are satisfied with the administration of the present incumbent, and see no reason to make a change. We never have subscribed to the idea of changing officers simply for the sake of a change—to "let somebody else have the job." The expression "He's had the job long enough" does not apply to the president of the Alabama Public Service Commission, for training in office is essential to the welfare of the public in that position.—Greenville Advocate.

PETE JARMAN FOR CONGRESS

"Only two more weeks and voters of Chilton County will go to the polls to cast their ballots for the persons they believe are the ones to fill important state and county offices.

Only those voting the Democratic ticket in Chilton County will have the opportunity and privilege of having a voice in the selection of not only county officers but also many state officers.

Among the candidates whose offices affect more than this county will be found Hon. Pete B. Jarman, Jr., who seeks to represent this county and the Sixth Congressional District in the Congress of United States to succeed Hon. W. B. Oliver, who is not in the race.

A thorough check-up over the district shows that Mr. Jarman will without a doubt become our next congressman. The News is for Mr. Jarman and does not hesitate to recommend him to the voters of Chilton County to fill this important position.

Mr. Jarman is thoroughly qualified to assume all the responsibilities that go with such an office. His experience in legislative matters, business, etc., has equipped him with an understanding that will go far in enabling him to serve his people while in the nation's capital.

Mr. Jarman is a comparatively young man, lacking several years before he will reach the half-century post. His rapid strides of progress toward the top of the ladder attest to the ability he displays when serving his fellowmen, from the time he was a clerk in his father's probate office, through the trying months he rose to distinction fighting for his country in France and his services as an official of the State of Alabama during recent years."—Chilton County News.

Home Demonstration Notes

At this season of the year when cows are getting so many green things from the pastures so many people are bothered with off-flavors in milk. This often renders the milk unfit for a beverage. The Experiment Station at Auburn has spent much time in research trying to find the cause and remedy for such off-flavors, and the following facts have been revealed by Mr. F. W. Burns, dairy specialist at Auburn:

"If Alabama's dairy industry is to continue to grow, the quality of our dairy products must be constantly improved. The clean, rich, wholesome flavor of milk is one of the greatest assets of the dairyman. While a healthy cow in mid-lactation practically always produces milk with a pleasing flavor when she is properly fed, several sources of off-flavors which must be guarded against have been brought to light as the result of recent research.

"Although there are many factors which may affect the flavor of milk by the time it reaches the doorstep of the consumer, there are only two principal causes of off- flavor milk at the time it is drawn from the udder. Perhaps the most common of these are flavors due to the feed eaten by the cow. Chief among the offenders in this group are weeds, such as wild onions and bitter weed. Certain green forage and root crops such as rye, cowpeas and turnips cause pronounced off-flavors in milk unless the grazing periods are properly spaced. Fortunately most of the detrimental effects of these feeds may be eliminated. Most feed and weed flavors pass into the cow within 30 minutes after the feed is consumed and remain for a period of three to four hours. Therefore, if the cows are removed from the pasture to a dry lot or clean pasture several hours before milking, most off-flavors will be eliminated. Usually four hours is sufficient but with such weeds as onions and bitter weeds a period of six to seven hours should be allowed. In cases where cows have access to only limited amounts of the above feeds, it may be possible to change the feeding plan so as to pasture only the young stock and dry cows on areas where plants that affect milk flavors are known to exist.

"Another class of off-flavors frequently encountered are those depending on the physiological condition of the cow. The statement is frequently made that milk from cows on pasture in the spring of the year contains a "grass" flavor. This flavor may usually be traced to a digestive disturbance in the cow, caused by the sudden change from dry feed to the highly succulent new grass. After a few days the cow becomes adjusted to her new diet, the intestinal disturbance is corrected, and the slight off-flavor largely disappears. This "grass" flavor in milk may be minimized greatly by allowing the cows to graze for only a short period each day until they have become accustomed to green feed.

"Another source of undesirable flavors in milk is the cow in late lactation, or those having inflamatory condition of the udder. One of the first symptoms of garget is an increase in the salt content of the milk, giving the milk a characteristic salty flavor. Cows that have been milking for a long time will sometimes produce salty milk even though they have no symptoms of a diseased udder. To eliminate this off-flavor it is a good idea to put every cow in the herd to the test by critically tasting the milk from each cow at definite intervals.

"Systematic elimination of the sources of off-flavors, together with absolute cleanliness in handling the milk after it is drawn will do much to increase the consumer demand for dairy products. No one can successfully question the superiority of milk as a food. Let us make this position doubly secure by giving constant attention to maintenance of a uniformly pleasing flavor."

The Garden

I wander in the garden as the moon is coming up,
And earth is holding beauty like a pale green china cup,
The lilies and the roses are nodding in the breeze,
And the lilac tosses gently like a freighter on the seas.
The jonquils and the violets still bloom as though at noon,
And the poplar trees gleam silver in the radiance from the moon.
The moonlight's glinting on magnolia trees in bloom,
And the fireflies and their lanterns to help dispel the gloom;
The willow weeps so softly that no one knows she's there,
And a perfume soft and lingering is floating through the air.
The garden holdls its beauty like a pale green china cup,
As I wander through its fragrance when the moon is coming up.

Pound of New Rayon Weave Will Reach Across the United States

Kansas City, April 13.—A string spanning the United States from New York to San Francisco would unroll from a single one-pound ball of new dress goods fiber described to the American Chemical Society here Monday.

With this artificial stuff, a rayon man for the first time has definitely outdone nature in fineness of diameter. The new fiber is about one third thinner than finest silk, and would unwind to a length of 2,500 miles per pound, compared with 1,000 miles a pound for rayons previously developed.

Several manufacturers have perfected the new weave simultaneously. All the processes were described in a general report on chemistry's progress toward improving artificial dress goods presented by Dr. Ernest D. Benger, general assistant director of the chemical department of E. I. du-Pont de Nemours & Co.

Dr. Benger said that these latest fibers are so fine that a woman's vest made of them alone could be concealed in the palm of one hand.

This accomplishment, he exlained is not in any sense culmination of a final goal, but is one more step in the direction of making clothes better and less costly.

The new fibers, he said, are due to improvements in machinery, in chemical solutions and in getting the impurities out of cellulose products from which the artificial threads are made.

The thickness of both silk and these artificial fibers is not measured, but is expressed in weight by units called deniers. A denier is something less in weight than an ordinary grain of dust. It is the weight at which 9,000 meters of fiber would weigh one grain.

The weight of silk averages, Dr. Benger said, one and two-tenths deniers, while the new rayon fibers range from one denier per filament to six-tenths of a denier.

The structure of these fibers, both natural and artificial, is now known. Thus, a cotton fiber. Dr. Benger said, is made of molecules so lnog that they would be visible under a microscope, except that they are too thin to be seen.

These cotton molecules are chains of 3,500 links, each link a bit of glucose. The artificial fibers are made of chains having only about 450 links apiece.

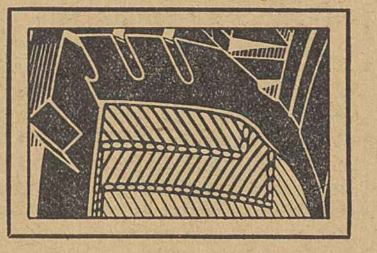
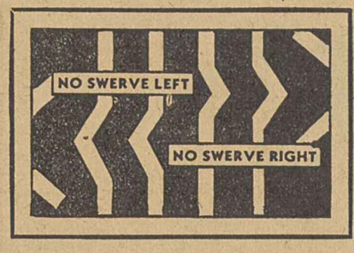
The body of the New Firestone High Speed Tire is made from selected long-staple cotton dipped in liquid rubber, absorbing eight pounds of rubber in every hundred pounds of cotton. This patented Gum-Dipping process insulates every fiber in every cotton cord, preventing internal friction which creates the heat so destructive to tire life, and giving to the tire added strength.



This heavy, broad, traction and non-skid tread is held to the cord body of the tire with Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords, a patented construction, making the cord body and tread an inseparable unit.



A leading university in 2350 tire tests has found that the new, scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread stops a car up to 25% quicker. Its super-traction and non-skid efficiency have also been proved in the famous Pike's Peak Race where for eight consecutive years it has been used on the winning cars.

A Fruitful Topic

Disraeli confessed that, although he was always forgetting their faces and never remembering names, he had no difficulty in being pleasant to his followers in the house.

"When I meet anybody in the lobby whom I don't know from Adam, and I see he expects me to know who he is, I take him warmly by the hand, look straight into his eyes, and say: 'And how is the old complaint?' I have never known it to fail."

Parson Tabs Rival Flag-Winners, but Ignores Statistics

IF ANYBODY ever conducts a poll to determine the most mulish person in history or poesy, my vote will go to the boy who stood on the burning deck. He probably had business elsewhere and his folks must have warned him about playing around with fire, but he persisted just the same.

That's a fine way to get a reputation, but it's not old Parson Bradley's way.

If anybody should ask him what is his way, the best he could do in the shape of a snappy comeback would be to nifty that it is something he has not been having recently, but that probably is beside the point. What is right on top of the point is the fact that the venerable Parson is about to pick some winners and he is not the sort of person to fool around with burning decks piled high with the figures of experts.

Instead he is going to hop right overboard and name the lucky lads who will participate in the World Series in September or October or whenever the ever changeable magnates have decided to hold the annual gold and glory classic.

Made Cubs Cinch in 1935 by Picking the Cards

Perhaps he could make 6,500,000 people happy by saying that the Giants, Yankees and Dodgers are going to triumph, but he is something more than just a crowd pleaser. So he is going to keep faith with Brooklyn by continuing to live there, while concentrating his prophetic powers upon the other entries. While doing so he is going to reveal a few secrets (the tattletale).

Charley Grimm

One of them concerns Charley Grimm. Most people think Charley is a St. Louis boy who master-minded his own way to fame in Chicago, but there are those behind the scenes who know better. He could never have done it if it hadn't been for the Parson. When the baldest of the Bradleys had finished dallying with the statistics 12 months ago, he was convinced that the Cards were going to win. So—just to show what he cared for figures—he picked the Giants. That left only the Pirates, Dodgers and Phils for the Cubs to attend to (since the Reds and Bees always can handle their own losing. So, naturally, the Cubs won the pennant.

This season the same system is being used at the earnest request of Mr. Horace Stoneham, owner of the Giants. Even though Mr. Sam Breadon, who collects the receipts (if any) in St. Louis, does not like it, the Parson first must be true to his home-towners. So he is selecting the Cards to win and the Cubs to finish second.

Tigers Should Win in American League

Hitherto when asked to name the winners of this younger organization (which quite often also is known as the American league) the Parson has displayed his versatility as an expert by maintaining a dignified silence.

From what he could gather while sojourning in the South, it seemed to the Parson that the Tigers were already in. Then he met Colonel Ruppert and heard different.

The Colonel spends most of his time dodging in and out from under the grandstand to inquire hoarsely of total strangers, "How we doing?" "Do you think we're gonna hold that five-run lead?"

But even though he may be all wet the Parson at least is not going to get burned by statistics. Instead, he merely is laying the two pennant races on the line as follows:

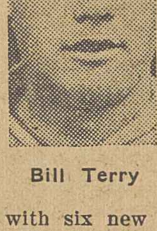
NATIONAL	AMERICAN
St. Louis	Detroit
Chicago	Cleveland
New York	New York
Pittsburgh	Boston
Brooklyn	Washington
Cincinnati	St. Louis
Philadelphia	Chicago
Boston	Philadelphia

When they finish the home stretch next September, you'll be able to tell whether the Parson is a good prophet.

PROOF that a guy can return from Florida with something more than a big expense account and a bad sunburn.

The dearest ambition of one of Chicago's most eminent racketeers is to own a big-time baseball club—Johnny Mize, the hard-hitting Cardinal, believes he would be jinxed if he did not step on home plate each time he goes from first base to the bench—Johnny Broaca is the champion lobby sitter among the Yankees. When he cannot find any one to sit and listen to him he just sits and watches the other guests—Bobby Cruickshank will tell you that he learned to putt by watching Bobby Jones in the play off at Inwood in 1928. Previously Cruickshank had been putting in the British manner, hitting the ball full. Now he hits only half of the ball and gives it plenty of overspin.

Not to numerous fans who have been writing in to ask whether Hitler has taken over the National league in the matter of the Jew who happens to be the game's best umpire—Why not inquire of the league president or the club owners whom you support? My own impression is that if these gentlemen so desired they could easily persuade Dolly Stark to return to the game he loves.



Bill Terry

Gossip now is that there was a woman in the case when Discovery was trimmed at Santa Anita. It seems that a celebrated movie actress who attended workouts likes to see horses go fast and so young Al Vanderbilt gave daily orders to that effect — Just to prove that they still are pals, Charley Grimm presented Freddy Lindstrom with six new bats when the Cubs met the Dodgers the other day—Bill Terry recently purchased a $50,000 annuity — Rookies who are having their heartbreaks now might like to know that Tris Speaker once was left in Little Rock by the Red Sox as part payment for the ball park they had been using in the Arkansas metropolis.

Throwers of Harlem rent parties should take a tip from Tampa socialites. Slot machines are legal in Florida and the license fee is camparatively small. So the boys and girls have taken to installing them in their homes, calling up their friends and then letting nature take its course. Since the machines can be regulated so that the customers get as little as 5 per cent, such entertainment is highly profitable for the hosts—Old-timers say that the late Kid Gleason was the roughest fighting man ever to don a big-time uniform — Fans walked off with 1,582 baseballs that were hit into the Brooklyn stands last year, but the record still is held by Wrigley field, where sixty baseballs often are used in a game.

Baseball Still Retrenches, Though Receipts Are Up

Baseball still is retrenching, although the gate receipts have increased vastly during the past two seasons. Players will tell you that no more than ten athletes draw $3,000 or better in the Double A (International, American association, Pacific Coast) leagues. Six years or so ago Newark alone paid that much money to as many men. In the lower loops it is even worse, with $55-a-month salaries being common in Class D circuits—Van Mungo has a deep yearning to be a racing car driver—Ben Geraghty, the Villanova collegian who may become the best shortstop ever to perform in Brooklyn, also is an expert checker player and a fair hand at bridge—While other athletes are complaining that the gloves are not big enough, Charley Grimm continues to hold his rating as the game's best first basemen by practicing bare-handed.

A former New York judge wants to take up the cause of Don Meade, the ace jockey recently banned in Florida. He would like to carry the case to the highest court in order to test the constitutionality of racing in the state—It is fillies' year at the breeding farms. The turf birth notices reveal that the femmes are leading the colts five to one—If the New York State Racing commission is not too busy it might investigate those loud squawks concerning the type of electric eye to be used at metropolitan tracks this year.

Reporters asked 93 major league ball players what club was the best they had seen this year. Fifty-two replied the Cards, while forty-one favored the Tigers.

What's become of:

Ned Harlan, Princeton's all-America back of twenty-five years or so ago, practices law at Bel Air, Md.

Winnie O'Connor, who won a bike race, flat and steeplechase horse races and a prize fight all in a day in Paris, is running a Jamaica tavern.

Eddie Burke, a mighty power among the bookmakers on metropolitan race-tracks in the long, long ago, now manages Havre de Grace, a mutuel plant.

Milton Henry, who ran the American Bar in Paris for several years after starring as a crack rider, is back at his first love — galloping horses at the Long Island courses.

"A MOTHER IS A MOTHER STILL, THE HOLIEST THING ALIVE"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS Samuel Taylor Coleridge, the Englishman, who included in his poem, "The Three Graves," the immortal lines which form the title of this article and the sentiment which he expressed in them is the sentiment back of day which we celebrate on the second Sunday of May—Mothers' Day. The glory and beauty of mother love and the consequent love for mother will all the joy that it brings is as old as the human race.

There is an ancient Jewish saying that "God could not be everywhere and therefore He made mothers." Some of the greatest men of all ages, with the true humility of the great and with the breadth of vision which recognizes the true values of life, have acknowledged their great debt to the guiding force that made their achievements possible. The classic example of that fact is the declaration attributed to Abraham Lincoln: "All that I am or ever hope to be, I owe to my angel mother."

No other subject has a history so wound about the heartstrings of mankind and with such a background of literature as mother love and love for mother. They have been the inspiration of some of our most famous poets and have produced some of our best-known and best-loved poems.

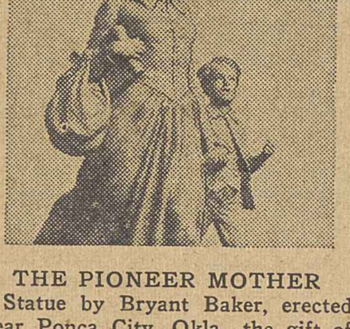
MOTHER

One not learned, save in gracious household ways;
Not perfect, nay full of tender wants,
No angel, but a dearer being, all dipt
In angel instincts, breathing Paradise,
Interpreter between the gods and men,
Who looked all native to her place, and yet
On tiptoe seemed to touch upon a sphere
Too gross to tread, and all male minds perforce
Swayed to her from their orbits as they moved.
And girdled her with music. Happy he
With such a mother! faith in womankind



THE PIONEER MOTHER

"To My First Love, My Mother" is the title of this poem by Christina Rossetti:

Sonnets are full of love, and this my tome
Has many sonnets: so here now shall be
One sonnet more, a loving sonnet, from me
To her whose heart is my heart's quiet home,
To my first love, my Mother, on whose knee
I learned love-lore that is not troublesome:
Whose service is my special dignity
And she my lodestar while I go and come.
And so because you love, and because
I love you, Mother, I have woven a wreath
Of rhymes wherewith to crown your honored name:
In you not four-score years can dim the flame
Of love, whose blessed glow transcends the laws
Of time and change and mortal life and death.

* * *

One of the most famous of all tributes to mother love is Rudyard Kipling's:

MOTHER O' MINE

If I were hanged on the highest hill,
Mother o' Mine,
I know whose love would follow me still,
Mother o' Mine.
If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o' Mine,
I know whose tears would come down to me,
Mother o' Mine, Mother o' Mine.
If I were damned of body and soul
I know whose prayers would make me whole,
Mother o' Mine, Mother o' Mine.

* * *

Equally famous are these verses by one of America's favorite poets, Eugene Field:

CHILD AND MOTHER

O Mother-my-Love, if you'll give me your hand,
And go where I ask you to wander,
I will lead you away to a beautiful land—
The Dreamland that's waiting out yonder.
We'll walk in a sweet posie garden out there
Where the moonlight and starlight are streaming
And the flowers and birds are filling the air
With fragrance and music of dreaming.

There'll be no little tired out boy to undress,
No questions or cares to perplex you;
There'll be no little bruises or bumps to caress,
Nor patches of stockings to vex you
For I'll rock you away on a silver dew stream,
And sing you asleep when you're weary,
And no one shall know of our beautiful dream,
But you and your own little dearie.

And when I am tired I'll nestle my head
In the bosom that's soothed me so often,
And the wide awake stars shall sing in my stead
A song which our dreaming shall soften.

So Mother-my-Love, let me take your dear hand,
And away through the starlight we'll wander—
Away through the mist to the beautiful land—
The Dreamland that's waiting out yonder!

Another of Field's poems in which the mother theme is predominant is

IN THE FIRELIGHT

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere,
And, like winged spirits, here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go.
And as the shadows 'round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly from a further room
Comes: "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And, somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years,
And lingers with a dear one there;
And as I hear my child's amen,
My mother's faith comes back to me,—
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again.

Oh for an hour in that dear place,
Oh for the peace of that dear time,
Oh for the childish trust sublime,
Oh for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows 'round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone
And "Now I lay me down to sleep!"

* * *

Similar in theme to "In the Firelight" is this poem:

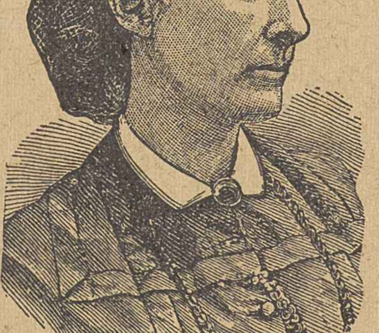
NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP

"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep,"
Was my childhood's early prayer
Taught by my mother's love and care.
Many years since then have fled;
Mother slumbers with the dead;
Yet methinks I see her now,
With love-lit eye and holy brow,
As, kneeling by her side to pray,
She gently taught me how to say,
"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep."

Oh! could the faith of childhood days,
Oh! could its little hymns of praise,
Oh! could its simple, joyous trust
Be recreated from the dust
That lies around a wasted life,
The fruit of many a bitter strife!
Oh! then at night in prayer I'd bend,
And call my God, my Father, Friend,
And pray with childlike faith once more
The prayer my mother taught of yore,—
"Now I lay me down to sleep;
I pray the Lord my soul to keep."

* * *

The author of that poem was not a widely-known poet, as Field was, but a banker. He was Eugene Henry Pullen, who was born in Baltimore in 1832, became a vice-president of the National Bank of the Republic in New York, served as president of the American Bankers' association in 1895-96 and died in Brooklyn in 1899. His poem was published many years before Field's appeared and, although the similarity between them has often been commented upon and has led to some confusion as to the authorship of the two, the likeness is not close enough to justify any suspicion of plagiarism on Field's part.



ELIZABETH AKERS ALLEN
Author of
"Rock Me to Sleep, Mother."

* * *

There is another famous mother poem which was once the cause of a heated controversy as to its authorship. This was the familiar

ROCK ME TO SLEEP, MOTHER

Backward, turn backward, O Time, in your flight,
Make me a child again just for tonight!
Mother, come back from the echoless shore,
Take me again to your heart as of yore;
Kiss from my forehead the furrows of care,
Smooth the few silver threads out of my hair;
Over my slumbers your loving watch keep—
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

Backward, flow backward, O tide of the years!
I have grown weary of dust and decay—
Toil without recompense, tears all in vain—
Take them and give me my childhood again!
I have grown weary of dust and decay—
Weary of flinging my soul wealth away;
Weary of sowing for others to reap—
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

Tired of the hollow, the base, the untrue,
Mother, O mother, my heart calls for you!
Many a summer the grass has grown green,
Blossomed and faded our faces between,
Yet with strong yearning and passionate pain
Long I tonight for your presence again.
Comes from the silence so long and so deep—
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

Over my heart, in the days that are flown,
No love like mother love ever has shone;
No other worship abides and endures—
Faithful, unselfish and patient like yours;
None like a mother can charm away pain
From the sick soul and the world weary brain.
Slumber's soft calm o'er my heavy lids creep—
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

Come, let your brown hair, just lighted with gold,
Fall on your shoulders again as of old;
Let it drop over my forehead tonight;
Shading my faint eyes away from the light;
For with its sunny-edged shadows once more
Haply will throng the sweet visions of yore;
Lovingly, softly its bright billows sweep—
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

Mother, dear mother, the years have been long
Since I last hushed to your lullaby song;
Sing, then, and unto my soul it shall seem
Womanhood's years have been only a dream.
Clasped to your heart in a loving embrace,
With your light lashes just sweeping my face,
Never hereafter to wake or to weep—
Rock me to sleep, mother—rock me to sleep!

The author of "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother" was Elizabeth Akers Allen who was born in the town of Strong, Maine, in 1932. Her mother died while she was still a child and her father took her to live in the town of Farmington. There, at the age of twelve she began writing verses, the first of which appeared in a New Hampshire newspaper under her pen name of "Florence Percy."

In 1847 she began contributing poems to a Vermont newspaper and eight years later she became assistant editor of the Portland (Maine) Transcript. Her first volume of poems, "Forest Buds From the Woods of Maine," was brought out in 1856, and the success of this book enabled her to go abroad three years later. While in Rome, Italy, she wrote "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother" and sent it to the Philadelphia Post, in which it was published in 1860. It immediately became popular, was widely reprinted and set to music by several different persons, although the author remained comparatively unknown.

In 1860 she was married to Paul Akers, a well-known sculptor and a native of Portland, Maine. In a little over a year after their marriage Akers died, as did their daughter, Gertrude, and the bereaved wife and mother returned to Portland to take up her work on the Transcript again. In 1863 she was appointed to a post in the War department in Washington. She lived in the capital during the stirring years of the Civil war, and was one of the throng of horror-stricken spectators who witnessed the assassination of President Lincoln in Ford's theater.

In 1866 her second book, "Poems by Elizabeth Akers (Florence Percy)," including "Rock Me to Sleep, Mother," appeared. In that year also she was married again, to E. M. Allen, and soon afterwards accompanied her husband to Richmond, Va., to live. "It was during her residence in that city that the extraordinary discussion arose concerning the authorship of her poem, 'Rock Me to Sleep, Mother,' says the Cyclopaedia of American Literature, which continues:

"It was claimed by no less than five aspirants to the honor of its composition. Mrs. Allen took no pains to vindicate her claim until, in 1868, A. M. W. Ball of Elizabeth, N. J., ventured to print a pamphlet containing affidavits of a number of his friends, who thought they remembered that he had written something of the kind ten or twelve years before. Then the real author was compelled to deny that she had stolen her own poem; and the controversy was conclusively settled in her favor by an elaborate review of the whole case, taking up a full page of the New York Times."

Among the better known "mother poems" by modern writers should be included this one by Theodosia Garrison:

I think the gentle soul of her
Goes gladly in some pleasant place,
With the old smile time may not blur
Upon her face.

She who was lover of the Spring,
With love that never quite forgets,
Surely sees roses blossoming
And violets.

She who so loved companionship
I may not think she walks alone,
Failing some friendly hand to slip
Within her own.

Those whom she loved aforetime, still,
I doubt not, bear her company;
Yea, even laughter yet may thrill
Where she may be.

For God is gentle to His guest,
And, therefore, may I gladly say,
Surely the things she loved best
Are hers today.

What better expression of the spirit of Mothers' Day than that last line—"Surely the things she loved best are hers today"?

Twenty Billion Years Is Age of Universe, Scientist Declares

Harvard Findings Differ With British Estimate

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—The universe is not so old after all. Flatly contradicting Sir James Jeans' figure of ten million times a million years for the age of the universe, Dr. Bart J. Bok of the Harvard college observatory has found that number approximately five hundred times too high.

Twenty billion years is the upper limit of the age of the universe, as viewed by Doctor Bok. Jeans' long time scale does not fit with the evidence of star clusters, with the known facts of the rotation of the Milky Way system or with the existing theories of the creation of the spiral nebulae. Nor does it explain the existence in the same star cluster of "young" red giant stars and of "old" dwarf stars.

"The giants with their tremendous energy output can hardly have existed for much longer than 10,000,000 years, unless we wish to make the as yet unfounded hypothesis that the energy radiated away is being replenished in some unknown fashion from surrounding space," Doctor Bok said.

A Stellar Catastrophe.

"We found it unlikely," he concluded, "that the observed clusters have existed for more than twenty billion years as groups of stars. Lemaitre's theory of the expanding universe indicates that a catastrophe took place a few billion years ago, and it is tempting to place the origins of the stars and stellar systems at the epoch of this catastrophe."

Hundreds of star clusters, including the well known Pleiades, Hyades, and Taurus, would now be on the verge of disintegrating all at once, torn apart by the gravitating forces of the Milky Way, if they had been in existence as long as Jeans believes, Doctor Bok has found.

How Age Is Figured.

"In the course of their development these clusters must have wandered through widely different parts of our galaxy, but in spite of this, under Jeans' long time scale we would find them ready to disintegrate, cosmically speaking, simultaneously," he said. "In other words if we were to take our observations at a future epoch removed from the present by only half a per cent of the total supposed age of our galaxy, no sign of them would be left.

"It seems absurd to assume that several hundred clusters, all of which had presumably considerable mass and density at the time of their birth, would be observed simultaneously on the verge of disintegration in a galaxy for which the conditions that determine the rate of disintegration will be apt to vary from point to point."

Astronomer Finds New Star Dust Rings in the Milky Way

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—Three tremendous rings of star-dust, hitherto unknown planetary nebulae, have been found in the Milky Way by Mrs. Muriel M. Seyfert of the Harvard college observatory.

Each of them is believed to be hundreds of times larger than our entire solar system, yet they are so far distant they can be seen only through moderately powerful telescopes. Even then the rings are not visible to the human eye but can only be detected by sensitive photographic plates where they appear as luminous rings surrounding brilliant nucleus stars.

Billion Mile Diameter.

Actually the tremendous nebulae are not rings but spheres or balls of expanding gas and tiny particles, some of them as fine as molecules. From their appearance on plates, however, astronomers have named them "ring nebulae." Mrs. Seyfert's discoveries were made through an examination of plates taken at Harvard's station at Bloemfontein, South Africa.

While sufficient data have not yet been assembled to permit accurate calculation of the size and distance of the rings, Harvard observers believe that like most of the approximately 130 known planetary nebulae, those found by Mrs. Seyfert are several hundred light years away from the earth and have a diameter that is expressed in billions of miles.

EVERYONE who sees Harriet Hilliard in "Follow the Fleet" or hears her sing on the radio with Ozzie Nelson's band ought to meet her as well; she's decidedly worth meeting. To begin with, she is much prettier in real life than in pictures. And to see her as the demure music teacher who, as Ginger Rogers' sister, falls in love with Randolph Scott, gives you no idea whatever of what sort of girl she is. She is magnetic, delightful, charming. And she is one of the few girls who have a career thrust upon them.

She never did want to go on the stage, but she had to earn her living. And when she was very young her mother pointed out to her the fact that it's better to train for a profession that pays well than for one that never will bring in much money. "Better a dancer at one hundred a week than a stenographer at fifteen," said Mamma, or words to that effect. So Harriet became a dancer. She appeared at one of Broadway's big movie houses, and on the road in musical shows. And she worked so hard that, at nineteen, she had to stop.

"If you want to get ahead in Hollywood nowadays, it's better not to be too good looking," remarked a fan magazine editor the other day. She has been meeting movie stars for some fifteen years now, and knows what she is talking about. "Hepburn isn't beautiful," said she. "Neither is Doris Dudley, RKO'S newest discovery. But they both have talent. Hollywood is too full of beauties who've been signed up for a few months, and more beauties who came out here hoping for the best, and finishing as waitresses."

Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America (what a title!) has decided that one week in May will be Memorial week for Will Rogers; during that week the Will Rogers Memorial at Saranac Lake will be dedicated. But Will Rogers did so many things that will make people remember him that he needs no other memorial.

For a long time it has been Ruby Keeler's ambition to be a great woman golfer; being a good actress and a marvelous dancer meant little in comparison to that.

She's been playing golf for some time, and recently she went into the Southern California woman's tournament, won three matches, and was put out in the last round. Looks as if she might achieve that ambition after all.

Did you hear the recent broadcast of Paul Whiteman's birthday celebration? Of course, it came at a bad hour—one-thirty in the morning Eastern Standard time; NBC kept its line open after midnight for it. The Paul Whiteman alumni staged it—and what a list of well-known people once worked for Paul! Morton Downey, Bing Crosby, Jane Froman, Ferde Grofe and George Gershwin, the composers, and Mary Margaret McBride.

And speaking of Morton Downey, he's sailing in May to keep concert engagements in England and Ireland—and how he loves to go to Ireland!

Here's a funny check-up on the popularity of radio programs. In London they've found that during a really big broadcast the consumption of water drops 85 per cent.

Taxis Replace Old Gharries as Vehicles in Holy City

The last of Jerusalem's famous fleet of ramshackle open horse drawn cabs has been relegated to the junk heap.

In their place modern taxicabs will convey the citizens of Jerusalem and visitors up and down the precipitous slopes of the Holy City.

Practically every visitor to Jerusalem used to take at least one drive in one of these horse cabs, or "gharries." They seemed as typically a part of the Jerusalem scene as gondolas in Venice or rickshas in Shanghai.

Unfortunately for the cab drivers, however, the steep city streets recently were asphalted for the benefit of automobile traffic. As a result the cab horses continually slipped and fell. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals intervened and made representations to the government resulting in the withdrawal of horse drawn cabs from the streets.

Mr. G. T. Towery Comments on The Ford Used Car Sales Plan

The recent announcement of the new R & G used car sales plan by the Ford dealers of the Atlanta Branch of Ford Motor Company—marks one of the greatest steps forward ever made by a dealer organization in setting a new and higher standard in used car values.

The trade-mark R & G stands for Renewed and Guaranteed — meaning that used cars sold by authorized Ford dealers under this trade mark have met a rigid set of specifications as to their mechanical condition as well as appearance. Backing these specifications and for further assurance of the quality of R & G cars is a written guarantee of "Satisfaction or Your Money Back," which is given to the buyer by the dealer. It reads as follows:

Mehcanical Condition

"We agree to correct at our expense any condition in this car or truck which is not in accordance with the above specifications, provided that we are notified by the purchaser of this condition within ten days from this date, and further provided that such condition is not the result of accident, neglect, or abuse of the car or truck after delivery to the customer, and that the car or truck has not been repaired or altered outside of our shop during the guarantee period."

Money-Back Guarantee

"We further agree that we will refund such part of the purchase price of the car or truck as has been paid by the purchaser, including any used car or truck applied as part payment or, at our option, the allowance price thereof in cash, thereby cancelling the sale if the purchaser so requests; provided that this request is made by the purchaser at or before------ o'clock on --------- 19--- and the car or truck is then returned to us in the same condition as when delivered." (Signed, Ford Dealer.)

In effect this written guarantee covers virtually every mechanical unit on the car, as well as the body, upholstering, hardware, top, paint, etc. Among the more important mechanical units covered are: brakes, chassis, clutch, electrical system, engine, (including bearings carbureator, compression, ignition points), radiator, rear axle, springs, steering and transmission.

Under this new R & G plan the buyer is permitted to drive the car he selects for two days—allowing him to put it through "its paces" on any test that he desires. If the car fails to measure-up to expectations in any way, he may return it to the dealer who will refund his money in full—no questions will be asked.

Mr. G. T. Towery, local Ford dealer, comments on this new plan by stating, "R & G does not mean that cars sold under this emblem will cost more than ordinary 'used cars,' it does mean the mark of an exclusive value. It is the buyers personal guarantee of complete satisfaction in the purchase of an automobile backed by the pledge of the Ford dealer from whom he buys it."

GIRL SCOUTS

All five Girl Scout troops held interesting meetings last week.

Girl Scout troops are being organized in Columbiana and Clanton under the direction of Miss Hodo, a federal recreational director.

The Girl Scout Council had an interesting and profitable project on last week. The members prepared and served the Arista Club banquet. The undertaking was especially profitable because of the generous and liberal contributions toward the menu from parents of Girl Scouts and friends of scouting in general. There were several ex-Arista club scouts who helped with the serving in addition to a group of enthusiastic scouts from Alabama College. The interest manifested by parents and friends in making the banquet a success serves to give new enthusiasm to those directing the Girl Scout activities.

The Dixie Regional Girl Scout Council will be held in Montgomery this year, May 1 to 6. This is quite an honor come to Alabama. Girl Scout leaders from Arkansas, Louisiana, Tennessee and Alabama will come together for an interchange of ideas in regard to the carrying out of the Girl Scout program. The conference affords an excellent opportunity for scout minded Alabamians to get a large amount of information and inspiration at very little expense. A group from the Montevallo Council plans to spend at least one day attending the conference.

April 25 to May 2 is "boys and girls week" throughout the country. Let each person in Montevallo think how he or she can help make life more enjoyable and profitable for her boys and girls.

Hitch-Hiker Is Killed Near Calera

Calera, Ala.—A white man, John McElrath, of Birmingham, about 50 years old, believed to be a hitch-hiker was struck and killed on the highway near here Friday afternoon by a truck driven by a negro, Levi McNeal, of Birmingham.

Officers, holding the negro at Calera on a manslaughter charge, said the accident occurred when the negro attempted to pass a highway truck and struck the man as he was walking along the left shoulder of the road. The dead man was carried to the office of Dr. R. C. Curtis where he was identified.

The accident occurred about four miles north of Calera at 4:30 p.m. The truck, said by officers to be owned by a Birmingham battery company, was going south.

PETE B. JARMAN, Jr.

To the Citizens of the Sixth Congressional District:

It has been my intention and keen desire to see personally every voter in the Sixth Congressional District, not only to express the appreciation I sincerely feel for your wholehearted and virtually unanimous support, not only because I so thoroughly enjoy doing so, but also because these personal contacts more accurately inform me of the needs and wishes of our people.

Mere words are inadequate to impart to you the depth of my appreciation for your magnificent support. The overwhelming majority with which I feel sure you will see fit to favor me on May 5 strengthens my desire to make you a good Congressman, worthy of the confidence and friendship you have so generously bestowed upon me.

I have conducted no speaking campaign, nor have I appointed any managers, depending on all of my friends in every county to constitute themselves my managers in their own sphere of influence. I have preferred to visit you personally, taking leave of absence without pay from my duties on March 1, to indulge in a thorough contact campaign. I have attempted to cement our relationship with a universal bond, to organize our future work toward our common welfare. That is the goal toward which we strive. Although it has been a physical impossibility to see each voter personally, I hope to be afforded that opportunity soon, and I anticipate with genuine pleasure the occasion of seeing you all in the future.

I urge all of my many thousands of good friends not to let overconfidence prevent us from obtaining an overwhelming victory, thereby sending me to Washington under the auspicious circumstances of your concerted effort and your solid support. A commanding majority will add greatly to my influence in your behalf in Congress. I trust that every qualified elector will exercise his Democratic inheritance and cast a vote on May 5.

I take this opportunity to reiterate my pledge to work unceasingly for t he people of this District. I shall ever hold the duties of office as an avowed public trust, with a cooperative attitude toward all. I thank you again from the bottom of my heart.

Sincerely your friend,
PETE B. JARMAN, Jr.

Mass Meeting Is Well Attended Candidates Bring Issue To Voters

Large Assembly at Legion Hut Last Saturday Night in Response to Invitation of the Shelby County Trades Council

A mass meeting was held at the Legion Hut in Montevallo last Saturday night in which officials and delegates of organized labor, as well as many other members and interested individuals came together to hear candidates for public office express themselves upon current issues of interest to the laborer and wage earner.

Reese Woolley, president of the Shelby County Trades Council, presided. After calling the meeting to order, Mr. Woolley, in a short and impressive talk, welcomed those in attendance, and very appropriately stated the purposes of the meeting.

About 150 delegates from different organized crafts and farmer groups were in attendance, besides a large number of others who were welcomed to the meeting.

The opportunity was extended to all candidates, and representatives of candidates not present in person, to express their views in regard to current issues and particularly labor questions.

The first expression came from Dr. D. S. Lightcap, of Columbiana, candidate for membership on the Shelby County Board of Education.

Judge Leon McCord was present to speak for himself as a candidate for National Democratic Committeeman from Alabama.

Judge H. L. Anderton, of Birmingham, represented himself as a candidate for the United States Senate from Alabama.

Dr. W. A. Harris spoke as a representative of Thomas H. Maxwell, of Tuscaloosa, candidate for Congressman from the Sixth District.

Miles Penton, president of the Tuscaloosa Central Labor Union, spoke as the representative of Pete Jarman, candidate for Congress in the Sixth District.

A. F. Lindbergh, of Birmingham, was present as the representative of Matt Murphy, candidate for National Democratic Committeeman from Alabama, and spoke in the interest of Mr. Murphy.

Hon. William Mitch, president of District 20, United Mine Workers of America, and recently elected president of the Alabama State Federation of Labor, was present to represent United States Senator John H. Bankhead, and spoke to the meeting in behalf of Mr. Bankhead.

The delegates present, and all others who attended the meeting expressed their appreciation of the manner in which the candidates responded to the invitation to have their causes presented to this group of people representing labor in this district. Several have expressed themselves as having had some opinions changed after hearing the things that were said in the meeting.

One man was heard to state it in this way: "You get a much more accurate impression of two candidates when you see them stand side by side and face to face and tell their stories than you do when you listen at them one at a time over the radio, or read their statements in a newspaper."

The Trades Council was delayed in its efforts to have this meeting, which was intended to be held further in advance of the primary election. Officials state that in the future such meetings will be held at a time better suited to the interests of all concerned.

After the meeting, the regular routine of business was transacted.

May Day Exercises Held At College

Miss Billie Hill, Saginaw, and Isabel Henderson, Mobile, were honored at the Alabama College May Day program Saturday afternoon as May Queen and Best Citizen, respectively. The queen's throne was in the center of the athletic field. She was attended by twenty students chosen by their class officers and faculty advisers on the basis of scholastic record and campus activities.

The high school band, under the direction of York Kildea of the college faculty, played as the class members marched. There were four may poles, one representing each class, and the Dance Club, under the direction of Miss Edith Lindberg, of the college faculty, presented a group of specially prepared dances.

Miss Louise Jones of Bessemer was chairman of the student committee in charge of arrangements. The faculty committee included Miss Alfreda Mosscrop, Miss Dawn Kennedy, Miss Katherine Farrah, Miss Edith Lindberg, Mrs. W. H. Trumbauer and York Kildea.

COMMUNIST SHOUTED DOWN IN SESSIONS OF LABOR DELEGATES

Florence, Ala., April 30 — The curtain fell here last night on what trade unionists unanimously agree was the most momentous convention ever held by the Alabama Federation of Labor.

Militant from the call to order Monday until the president's gavel banged for adjournment, the thirty-fifth annual convention voted to meet next year in Anniston after giving William Mitch, district president of the United Mine Workers of America, the highest office within its power.

Moreover, the convention wrote labor history in Alabama by giving, in effect, blanket approval to industrial organization, and further emphasized that sentiment by an overwhelming vote for Mitch.

Outstanding among developments of the three-day session were endorsement of a resolution approving mass organization of the nation ing mass organization of the nation's workers, and enthusiastic approval of all New Deal legislation and policies.

The convention just as emphatically shouted "no" to each and every proposal in conflict with the administration's program, and placed its stamp of approval on resolution after resolution looking to the return of President Roosevelt for another term.

William O. Hare, Birmingham, veteran secretary, was returned to office by acclamation, after Ted Williams withdrew from the race.

Further emphasizing its stand in favor of mass organization the convention selected Dan Thompson, Birmingham, president of the Street Car Union, as delegate to the national convention.

E. Z. Yeager, a prominent figure in Alabama labor for years, and a member of the Birmingham Typographical Union, was returned to office as first vice president while Mrs. Willie Taylor, also of Birmingham, was an easy winner for vice president at large over Mrs. Will Densmore, Birmingham, and Miss Inez Denmark, Mobile.

After a stormy session in which the convention went noisily on record against all forms of communism and booed would-be speakers for that crusade from the floor, approval came for industrial organization in the form of a resolution checking that issue up to interna-

Second Leadership School May 5th

On Tuesday, May 5th, the Home Demonstration Clubs of Shelby County held their second Leadership School for the year. The group of forty-six women assembled in the high school auditorium at Columbiana and rendered a short program preceding the leadership school. The Ebenezer Club favored the other members with a short playlet, the theme of which was "Mothers' Day", centering around home demonstration work. Those taking part were Miss Addie Mae Underwood, Mrs. E. L. Garrett, and Mrs. Ivy Swinford.

As the visiting leader for the Leadership School we had with us Miss Mary Thompson, Home Demonstration Agent, Dale County. In the morning she gave a most interesting demonstration on simple salads and varied salad dressings. In the afternoon the demonstration was on desserts.

At the lunch hour the entire group spread lunch together in the Home Economics Room at the high school and afterwards enjoyed a social hour.

Plans were discussed by the entire group concerning the Public Speaking contest, which is sponsored each year by the Home Demonstration Clubs. Plans were also discussed for the canning contest and the Triennial Conference which is to be held in Washington the first week in June.

Several of the clubs had 100 per cent leadership attendance. Only the leaders from the various clubs or substitute leaders, and the president are to attend these schools. They then go back to their respective clubs and assist with the demonstration in their individual communities. All, except three clubs from the county were represented.

The women spent an enjoyable day with the members from other sections of the county.

Congratulations, Pete!

OUR CONGRESSMAN

Hon. Pete B. Jarman, Jr., in an overwhelming majority vote in Tuesday's Democratic Primary, was designated as the choice of the people of the Sixth District as their Representative in the Congress of the United States.

AUTOMOBILE BURNED MONDAY NIGHT NEAR ALDRICH

A Chrysler automobile driven by Arthur Woods, negro, of Aldrich and carrying some other passengers, caught on fire Monday night just beyond Lewis Lawley's store, and was completely destroyed.

It is said the fire started from defective wiring. The car was turned off the road into a shallow ditch. None of the occupants were injured.

Come to Montevallo Next Saturday, Second Big Event

The second Big Event Day in Montevallo's trade building campaign, which comes to the climax at three o'clock in the afternoon, next Saturday, May 9, promises to be the biggest occasion in the trade history of this community.

It was said that the first big event brought more people here than anything had ever done, not excepting the circus. The attraction for next Saturday will prehaps double the attendance and interest of the first event.

For the grand slam next Saturday Mr. W. J. Kennerly will again take command of the loud speaker, and call out the results of the most interesting trade contest ever held here.

The merchants who are participating in this event and making it possible for their customers, are pulling down the home stretch with all the power possible in order to make the second Big Event as far-reaching as possible.

Every person who trades at one of the stores becomes eligible to have a part in the affair Saturday. Ask one of them about it if you have not already done so.

Remember, you must be here Saturday, right on the spot at three o'clock, if you would exercise your rights in the affair. You can't do it if you are elsewhere.

Join the crowds in Montevallo next Saturday. The merchants and citizens of the Town extend you a hearty welcome. Come to Montevallo any day—every day—to do your buying.

Sales Tax Foe For Governor

JEFF BEELAND, GREENVILLE, IS IN THE TALK FOR CHIEF EXECUTIVE

Montgomery, Ala., May 4.—Politicians returning to the capitol following the last special session of the state legislature have all agreed on one thing—and it's not how to get more taxes, reported F. W. Stanley, editor of the Greenville Advocate, on a visit here.

"After checking up on the sentiment of the state, the political chiefs in their conferences here, have agreed that they have one job ahead and that is to stop a 'Beeland for governor' wave that is sweeping the four corners of the state.

"Big wigs of the political tepee, called here to revamp plans for more taxes, since their utter failure during the last session, came back with reports that the name of the firey little fighter from Greenville has caught the public fancy and that there is a movement on foot in many counties to draft Jeff P. Beeland, campaign manager of the consumers Anti-Sales Tax Association of Alabama, for a candidate for governor at the next election," said Stanley.

"In fact, political observers at the capitol point out that the politicians are so anxious to stop this public clamour for a man for governor who is opposed to more taxes and who demands economy, that they have forgotten their drive for more tax money and that some economies will be offered in the state government to offset the growing demand for an economy government," Stanley said.

"Beeland, successful farmer, merchant and business man of Butler County has never been a candidate for office. Although he always has been a fighter for civic betterment and for economic business principles in government, his large business connections have been so that he has made many financial sacrifices in his effort to aid the cause of the people.

"In the recent campaign staged by the anti-sales tax organization, he devoted much time to the fight and answered calls from his Greenville home near midnight to rush to Montgomery for conferences before legislative days.

"Beeland, polished southern gentleman, is soft spoken, but when irked at political tactics draws no words in explaining his reaction to the public," Stanley said.

"The Greenville planter, his close associate says, does not covet any political office, yet, they are of the opinion that should the public and voters in general draft him for a candidate, he would accept," added the editor. "They point out that he would not become attached to any political machine for election."

The call is urgent.—Mrs. C D. Cowart, chairman.

Merger Proposed Of M. E. Churches

WOULD CONSTITUTE A BODY OF EIGHT MILLION MEMBERS

Columbus, Ohio, May 4.—The general conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was committed Monday night to a program of unification with other Methodist branches to form the world's largest Protestant body—a Methodist Church having 8,000,000 members in 42 countries.

Conference delegates voted 470 to 83 to approve the program of union with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Methodist Protestant Church after their leaders visioned in pleas for the merger the possible union of all Protestant churches into a single denomination.

The unification proposal goes now to the annual conferences of the Southern Church and the Methodist Protestant Church, with final ratification possible in 1938 at the general conference of the Southern church. The Methodist Protestant general conference convenes May 20 at High Point, N. C.

The vote Monday was an initial step toward healing two great splits in the Methodist Church — the separation of the Methodist Protestant Church in 1821 over the question of lay representation, and the division between the Northern and Southern churches in 1884 because of a dispute over slave ownership.

Liberal leaders led a bitter fight over provisions for dividing the United Church into six jurisdictions, with Negro churches segregated in a separate jurisdiction. They declared the provision was "racial discrimination of the ugliest kind."

Bishop William F. McDowell, of Washington, venerable dean of Methodist bishops, who 12 years ago presented a plan of unification which passed both the Northern and Southern general conferences and failed by only a few votes of winning final ratification, offered the program of union to the delegates Monday.

"Let me see this approved from the other side if it is denied me here," he pleaded. "Do not hesitate to believe that He desires union of this church with all churches which bear His name; this (proposal) is not the end of union—"

Dr. Guy E. Cutshall, of Lincoln, Neb., chancellor of Nebraska Wesleyan University, joined Bishop McDowell in a plea for unification of all Protestant churches.

"It is not a mere matter of church union," he said. "All the churches must organize into one body to meet the encroachments of the pagan states. This is but our first step."

Thirty-three of the 52 Negro delegates to the conference protested against division of the United Methodist Church into five geographical jurisdictions and a sixth for Negro churches.

Earmarked Funds For The Schools

NEW PLAN AGREED UPON AT SPECIAL MEETING OF THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

Montgomery, Ala., May 1.—The school leaders of Alabama will no longer fight for a parity constitutional amendment according to Garland S. Smith, of Vernon, president of the Alabama Education Association. Instead, they will launch a drive to have all school revenues, including those for higher institutions, placed in one educational fund, this fund to be maintained by revenue especially earmarked for education.

The new plan was agreed on at a special meeting of the executive boards of the Alabama Education Association and the Alabama Congress of Parents and Teachers, Mr. Smith explained. School School leaders concluded that it is practically impossible to get the right kind of a parity amendment passed at the present time. The Harrison bill, passed by both houses on the last day of the recent legislative session, but which died in conference committee, abolished the special educational trust fund and exempted highway funds in full, as well as appropriations for the judiciary of the state.

"By getting parity through earmarked funds," Mr. Smith said, "the schools will be able to stand on their own bottom and it can no longer be said that schools will not get the taxes levied in their behalf. Under our proposed new program funds can be voted for education with the absolute assurance that they will go for the purpose intended.

"We want it understood," Mr. Smith declared, "that we are continuing our fight for parity for education, but we shall try to get real parity this time and in a different way."

Safety Week Here Beginning Monday

SPONSORED BY BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN

In an effort to bring about more safety in Montevallo, the Club of Business and Professional Women is sponsoring a safety week program, beginning Monday next, the eleventh of May and extending until Monday, the eighteenth. The members of the club feel the need for regulation of traffic, as well as the need for some public education as to accident hazards and traffic practices. So during the coming week a plan for doing these things has been developed. It is hoped that every owner of a car in Montevallo will sign the safety pledge which reads "I agree to do my part, and you can 'count on me to prevent accidents'." The persons who sign the safety pledge may display on their cars a "count on me" safety auto plate.

To defray expenses of the campaign a charge of twenty-five cents will be made for the safety plate. It is expected that the safety plate will perpetuate the objectives of the safety campaign, and that in Montevallo from now on we will consider the lives of others whether they be automobile drivers, pedestrians, skipping children, skaters or bicyclists.

The hazards from automobile accidents is large and especially in a small community without traffic regulations or traffic policing. In Montevallo traffic itself is heavy and at times somewhat congested. Automobile ownership here, considering population, is high. Our need for some safety program is really great.

Next week when the campaign starts and during the progress of the campaign, it is hoped that each citizen will give support to the ideals of the safety program, and will support the movement; and that each car owner will show his cooperation in trying to promote safety by buying and placing on his car the tag that bears the slogan "count on me to prevent accidents."

Mrs. Ashley Jeter, representing the Business and Professional Women's Club, presented the Safety Week program to the Civic Club at its meeting Wednesday. It was voted unanimously by the Civic Club to endorse the movement and to cooperate with the Women's Club in carrying out their plans for Safety Week.

A public meeting is being arranged for next Thursday night in connection with Safety Week activities when a representative of the State Safety Patrol will be present for a discussion of the subject. Place of the meeting and complete details will be announced by the ladies in charge of arrangements.

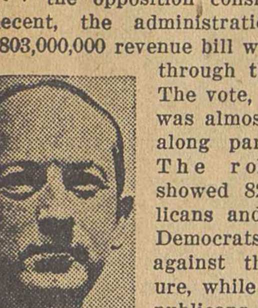
House Hurriedly Passes New Revenue Bill—Roper Stirs Business Men to Sharp Retort—Young Farouk Becomes King of Egypt.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.



Sen. Harrison

WITH extraordinary speed which the opposition considered indecent, the administration's new $803,000,000 revenue bill was pushed through the house. The vote, 267 to 93, was almost strictly along party lines. The roll call showed 82 Republicans and only 11 Democrats voted against the measure, while four Republicans deserted the minority to cast their lot with the administration.

The bill was handed to the senate whose finance committee, headed by Pat Harrison, had been studying it in secret sessions in order to be prepared for the public hearings that opened two days after the house had acted. There had been predictions that this committee would modify the measure radically, but the opposition to it in Democratic ranks seemed to have faded away and its passage by the senate without material change was deemed probable.

As passed by the house the bill provides:

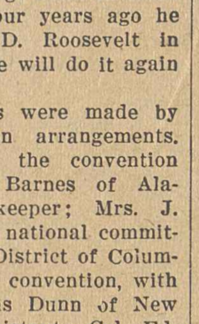
1. A graduated tax on corporation income which, it is estimated, will force distribution of $3,360,000,000 more in dividends and yield the government an additional $620,000,000 annually.
2. A "windfall" tax on unpaid or refunded processing taxes imposed under the invalidated AAA, which is expected to yield $100,000,000.
3. Continuation of the capital stocks and excess profits for six months to yield $35,000,000.
4. A refund of $35,000,000 to processors who suffered financial losses under the old AAA.

THE $3,000,000,000 Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage bill, with its threat of currency inflation, was blasted out of its pigeonhole Friday and assured of a vote in the house during the present session.

Five representatives signed the petition to remove the bill from the house rules committee, completing the 218 signatures necessary to bring up the bill.

Speaker Byrns, Chairman O'Connor of the rules committee, and the other Democratic chieftains, by sheer political power, are said to have held the farm-mortgage, currency-expansion measure in the committee for more than a year under express orders of President Roosevelt.

The Frazier-Lemke bill proposes to amortize farm mortgages by the issuance of $3,000,000,000 in new currency. It provides for a sharp downward revision of interest rates on mortgages.



Sec. Roper

DANIEL C. ROPER, secretary of commerce, appeared before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual meeting in Washington and warned its members, most of whom are persistent critics of New Deal policies, that unless private enterprise takes up the slack in employment, business must pay the relief bill out of earnings.

"It is the responsibility of all business and industrial enterprises," said Roper, "and not of one particular segment of the government to increase its efforts for greater employment. If a substantial measure of increased re-employment does not take place the taxation for relief purposes will come largely from business earnings. There must be re-employment or a longer period of increased taxation."

Various members of the chamber replied spiritedly. Roy C. Osgood, vice president of the First National bank of Chicago, predicted that if the administration embarked on a sound fiscal program that would inspire confidence, business would make rapid strides toward recovery. He criticized the pending tax on corporate earnings as impracticable and a brake on business expansion and stability.

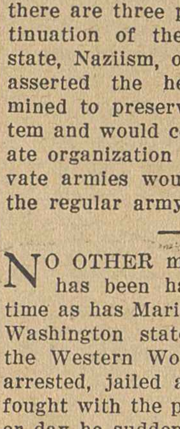
Fred H. Clausen, president of the Van Brunt Manufacturing company of Horicon, Wis., told the chamber that the rising tide of public spending had been "rolling onto our people for five years," and there was no end in sight. He declared that the re-employment mandates laid down by President Roosevelt, Secretary Roper and others were practically impossible in the light of the increased burdens heaped on industry.

The American Federation of Labor reported that "little or no progress" had been made in re-employment during the first quarter of this year.

The federation estimated 12,184,000 persons were unemployed in March. Seasonal gains in business and agriculture, returning 559,000 persons to work, were "about normal," the report said.

CONTINUING the policy of centralizing control over the activities of American citizens, the senate passed a new vocational education bill introduced by Senator Walter F. George of Georgia and supported by Majority Leader Robinson of Arkansas. It was strongly opposed by Senator King of Utah, Democrat, who insisted education was a responsibility of the states, not of the federal government.

The measure authorizes an annual appropriation of $12,000,000 to be distributed among the states on a matching basis, in proportion to population. In addition it authorizes $1,200,000 a year to be allotted for the payment of salaries and travel expenses of vocational teachers, and $1,000,000 a year to be allotted for the preparation of teachers and supervisors.



King Farouk.

FUAD I, king of Egypt, died of a gangrenous throat infection at his country place near Cairo at the age of sixty-eight. The crown prince, Farouk, a sixteen-year-old pupil in the royal military academy at Woolwich, England, was immediately proclaimed king and started for Egypt, sailing from Marseilles on a British liner escorted by a British warship in order to avoid going by way of Italy.

Before his death Fuad named a regency council of three to govern the country until Farouk comes of age. The young king, who is six feet tall and well educated, hopes to return to England to complete his studies at Woolwich. It was feared in Cairo that Fuad's death would have an adverse effect on the negotiations for a new Anglo-Egyptian treaty which will give Egypt a greater measure of freedom from British control.

Fuad, a descendant of Mohammed Ali, founder of the Egyptian royal house, was the youngest son of Khedive Ismail Pasha "the magnificent," Egyptian sovereign from 1863 to 1879. Great Britain placed Fuad on the throne as sultan of Egypt in 1917. He became king on March 15, 1922, when Britain abolished its protectorate and established the kingdom of Egypt.

REICHSFUEHRER HITLER has made Hermann Wilhelm Goering controller of national economics, and he has decreed an era of Spartan simplicity for the German people. Goering summoned the commissars for raw materials to a conference and warned them they must further restrict imports and help draft measures to increase exports. Only goods vitally necessary to the army and materials needed to produce goods for foreign export must be allowed to enter Germany, Goering decreed.

Officials of the propaganda ministry further darkened the picture of the near future by telling the press it must prepare the public for a "stiffening of relations between France and Germany as soon as the French elections are finished." They also deplored the fact that relations with England have suffered.

The officials asserted they expected a period in which Germany would have to rely on its own resources and demanded that the press help create the atmosphere necessary to induce the public to "do its share."

ITALY'S victorious troops in northern Ethiopia continued their advance on Addis Ababa, though it was somewhat retarded by the efforts of the natives to blow up the roadways and otherwise harass the invaders. The Italian motorized column in this movement is the most formidable yet formed in this war and is notable for the large number of white troops included.

General Graziana's southern army, meawhile, was driving toward Harar, second city of the empire, in three columns. The Ethiopians were putting up stiff resistance at various points but everywhere were driven back, according to Italian dispatches.

When the Italian forces reached Debra Birhan, only 75 miles from Addis Ababa, Emperor Haile Selassie ordered the capital city left undefended, hoping the invaders would occupy it without bloodshed. The government prepared to move out, and the native inhabitants all scuttled for the hills. Foreigners took refuge in the legations, the Americans going to the British compound where there was a bomb-proof shelter.

Prince Von Starhemberg

CIVIL war in Austria became a possibility as the quarrel between the Fascists led by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg and the clerical and monarchist elements became acute. Government officials, however, were trying desperately to patch up the trouble.

Prince Von Starhemberg, who is vice chancellor, in a defiant speech at Horn warned his political opponents that his heimwehr, or home guard, would be dissolved "only over my dead body."

Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, speaking at Baden, retorted that "Austria is not Italy and Austrians are not Fascists."

Von Starhemberg asserted that if internal foes press too hard there will be a "repetition of 1934"—when the heimwehr triumphed in a short but bloody civil war against Socialists. False friends surround Schuschnigg, Von Starhemberg said, and the heimwehr plans to protect him from them.

The vice chancellor directed a thinly veiled reproof at monarchists, who are too "democratic" to suit him. "Democracy in Austria is high treason," said he.

For Austria, said Starhemberg, there are three possibilities—a continuation of the authority of the state, Naziism, or Communism. He asserted the heimwehr is determined to preserve the Fascist system and would continue as a separate organization but that other private armies would be absorbed by the regular army.

NO OTHER member of congress has been having so lively a time as has Marion A. Zioncheck of Washington state, the Playboy of the Western World. He has been arrested, jailed and fined, and has fought with the police; and the other day he suddenly decided to marry Miss Rubye Louise Nix, a stenographer in the accounting division of the PWA at Annapolis. With a Washington license he dashed around looking for a minister who had left the city several years ago. Then he rushed to Maryland, obtained another license, woke up a domine and he and Rubye were made man and wife. Next day Marion led Mrs. Zioncheck into the gallery of the house, and the members all arose and cheered them. Perhaps his actions will be a trifle more conventional hereafter.

Sen. Barkley

SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY of Kentucky, who was temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention in 1932 and as such delivered the keynote speech, will serve in the same capacity at the Philadelphia convention in June, outlining the issues of this year's campaign as his party views them. Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas will be the permanent chairman again. Yet another repeater will be former Judge John E. Mack of New York. Four years ago he placed Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination, and he will do it again in June.

These selections were made by the committee on arrangements. Other officers of the convention chosen are: Lee Barnes of Alabama, chief doorkeeper; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, national committeewoman of the District of Columbia, hostess of the convention, with Mrs. Agnes Collins Dunn of New Hampshire as assistant; Col. Edward C. Halsey, secretary of the senate, sergeant at arms; Representative Clarence Cannon of Missouri, parliamentarian, assisted by Representative John J. O'Connor of New York; W. Forbes Morgan, secretary of the convention.

National Chairman Farley said that the two-thirds rule, which has prevailed in Democratic conventions for a century, will not be abolished. The rules committee will be headed by Senator Bennett Clark of Missouri and it will report for abrogation of the two-thirds rule as well as elimination of the unit rule. The latter binds the state delegations to abide by the decision of a majority of the delegation. According to Mr. Farley, these changes will not prevent the practically unanimous nomination of President Roosevelt.

Present plans are to have Mr. Roosevelt go to Philadelphia on Saturday, June 27, to close the convention by accepting the nomination in a speech delivered either in the Municipal stadium or in the University of Pennsylvania stadium close to the convention hall.

DESPITE strong opposition the British house of lords voted, 62 to 35, to apolish the ancient privilege of its members to be tried by their peers in criminal proceedings and not before ordinary courts.

The movement to abolish the privileged trials of peers was brought on after the recent trial before the house of lords of Edward Southwell Russell, Lord de Clifford. He was acquitted December 12, 1935, on a charge of causing the death in a motoring accident of Douglas George Hopkins, an automobile driver.

Three Kinds of Gold
One Lynched; One Jumped

Arthur Brisbane

King Fuad, king of Egypt, dead means nothing to 130,000,000 Americans or to 15,000,000,000 other human beings on earth. It means much to England, real ruler of Egypt, now obliged to find another king to "behave himself, do as England says," and hold down Egypt's anti-British hatred.

A mob seized Lint Shaw, fifty-year-old negro, and lynched him on "the usual charge," not waiting for a trial.

Joe Bowers, sentenced to 25 years for mail robbery, locked in the island fortress of Alcatraz, tried to escape by climbing ten feet of plain wire, two feet of barbed wire, and jumping down a 60-foot cliff into the water. He climbed while sharpshooter guards pumped bullets into him, and jumped down the cliff. Asked when "booked" at Alcatraz, "Who is to be notified if you die?" Bowers replied: "Nobody, nobody cares whether I die or not."

Hitler apparently has chosen his successor "in case," in the person of Air Minister Goering, now made "assistant dictator," with control of two great German problems of raw materials and foreign exchange.

In New York 175 naval cadets from the German cruiser Emden, name well remembered from the war, explored the city, guarded by detectives in case of hostile demonstrations.

Commercial boycotts of Germany, organized in New York, have done more harm to the Nazi government than could be done by any mob attack on German cadets.

California possesses "three kinds of gold": yellow gold, of which there is plenty left in the ground; "black gold," which is the oil in lakes thousands of feet down, and the "white gold," water from the mountains, first used to develop power, then to irrigate crops.

Another gold, more important than those combined, is the gold of education.

Driving through this country, if you see a particularly fine building, tall columns, wide grounds, for healthy play, that is a public school. Once it would have been the prison or feudal castle.

You see another building, almost as impressive as the high school. That is a public library. The accumulated knowledge of the world is free.

Newsboys cry "What do you read?" The Niagara of books pouring from the presses, a vast majority forgotten as they are born, make many ask "What shall I read?" Of the books that every one must know, many are unnecessarily long, will not be read, and need condensation, in this day of newspapers, moving pictures, and radio.

Paris perceives that following recent elections extreme radicals will be powerful in the new chamber, and those that have money left begin panicky selling. Bank of France shares dropped violently, meaning lack of confidence in government stability, with fear of war in all minds.

The last war knocked the franc from 19 cents to 4 cents. What would another war do?

When stock gambling starts, it moves rapidly. Since March last year, stock prices have gone up 60 per cent, business has increased 18 per cent, employment only 5 per cent. Not much cheerfulness in that.

Since last March the New York Stock exchange "values" have increased by twenty thousand million dollars. Excellent "bait" for the ignorant.

New Jersey citizens dropped from relief invade legislative halls, camp out, sleep on the floors, promise to remain until New Jersey supplies money and food.

Ewing township, New Jersey, with 9,000 population, taking 450 families off the dole, told them officially to go out and beg. Begging being illegal, each family was provided with a begging license. That may be called "economic relief."

Tokyo worries about Russia "plotting a war against Japan," but no plotting is necessary. Russia knows the location of every Japanese city, town and factory. It would be necessary to declare war and start dropping bombs, particularly bombs that spread fire.

Starting a war for foreign countries is as easy as "shooting up a gambling game" among our racketeers; no secrecy or plotting necessary.

Relief Problem

Washington.—One swallow does not make a summer nor does one statement, even though from a high official, make a condition absolute. But one statement from a high official under the present New Deal relief setup comes rather close to disclosing the transcendent importance of the nation's relief problem in American economy at this time.

I refer to the recent testimony by Harry A. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator and professional reliever, before the house committee on appropriations. He told that group a few days ago that 3,853,000 heads of families or unattached persons were receiving a livelihood for themselves and their families from the federal government on March first of this year. If this be true, and it can hardly be disproved, there are nearly fifteen million persons dependent entirely upon Federal assistance. And the condition appears even worse when it is shown that about ten million others are receiving assistance from state, county and city relief or charitable organizations. In short, the Hokpins testimony reveals that about 20 per cent of all of our people are living on relief money.

These figures are astounding. They are made the more amazing when one considers that the condition exists even after the New Deal has expended approximately twenty-one billions in its three years of government management, the bulk of the outgo being directly chargeable to what Mr. Roosevelt has consistently maintained was an emergency.

I have reported to you intermittently heretofore the various stages through which Reliever Hopkins has gone in search for means to solve the relief problem. I have been among those observers here who have felt that even though Mr. Hopkins lacks practical experience in commercial life and even though he casts aside every consideration except those inherent in the mind of a man who has devoted his life professionally to relief work, that he should be given time to solve the problem, it seems to me, however, that he has had ample time to find the answer if he is going to provide a solution. Neither he nor President Roosevelt has given any indication yet that they know the answer or even have a clew to it. The net result of their efforts to date has been the expenditure of money in unprecedented amounts and the piling up of a debt, the like of which this country never has known.

Mr. Hopkins has gone about his job smugly and with that apparent complacency that characterizes the official who is convinced that he alone is equipped to do a particular job. By his attitude, he has created in congress a feeling that he thinks he is a superior being, and if anything makes a congressman hot under the collar, it is to see a member of the executive branch exhibit a pose that the congressmen are dumbbells. Some of them are, of course, but that is not true of all and it is fast doing Mr. Hopkins no good at all to show arrogance toward the men who go out and campaign directly for the votes of the people.

Visionary Policy

I said that the relief problem was of transcendent importance in governmental affairs at this time. This is true because I believe the conviction is growing that the whole New Deal policy on relief is impractical and visionary; that it is founded upon a wrong psychology; that it is creating in this nation the greatest mass of panhandlers and "the world owes me a living" type or class of individuals that has ever existed anywhere and that, in addition the men who are doing the job for the federal government lack the ability to understand its whole significance.

As proof of the observations I have just stated, let me point out how the demands for vast expenditures of money and wholesale methods of relief for the destitute have subsided in congress. Time was when a half dozen so-called welfare workers, college professors or organization leaders could get a hearing by the simple crook of a finger before a congressional committee. Such men as Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, and Senator Costigan of Colorado, and the late Senator Cutting of New Mexico, to mention only a few, would weep salty tears in senate speeches; they would call for ten billions for this and five billions for that and other billions for other things and shout that people were starving in the midst of plenty. And they were starving in the midst of plenty, but the shouting and the tumult raised by these political saviors did not provide a solution for the problem. I have a hunch that the silence of such men as these through the last year can mean only that they were off on the wrong foot. They cannot help but realize that their theories were all wet, because Mr. Hopkins certainly has disproved the value of their plans.

Another indication of how congress feels is the movement to divide the billion and a half relief fund, which President Roosevelt asked, between Mr. Hopkins and Public Works Administrator Ickes. The President demanded that congress give the whole fund to Mr. Hopkins. It probably will work out that way eventually but the feeling against Mr. Hopkins cannot be denied. It is violent and only a small part of it has come to the surface.

The congressmen could not afford to see the flow of money cut off in an election year so they maneuvered to spank Mr. Hopkins by seeking to give a portion of the money to Mr. Ickes.

Now, it is currently rumored that Mr. Ickes, who never has liked Mr. Hopkins, has done some lobbying in the fine underground manner of which he is capable. He sincerely believes that the use of funds in the construction of permanent things like buildings, roads and bridges gives the government and taxpayers at least something for their money. But, be that as it may, the ground swell against Mr. Hopkins is very powerful and if Mr. Hopkins possessed any understanding of the science of the times he would see it. Thus far he has given no indication that he understands what it means.

What's the Answer?

Where will it all end?

The answer to this relief problem is not now near enough to hazard a guess.

Let us go back for a brief review. When President Roosevelt took hold of the relief problem early in his administration, he advanced two theories. They were to solve our problems and solve them quickly. He urged the NRA and the PWA, which with the AAA, formed the first battalion of the alphabetical army. The NRA was designed to regiment business and indirectly force re-employment by the shortening of hours and the spread of work. The PWA was to provide a lot of construction jobs immediately, giving work to those not absorbed in private commerce and industry and thus take up the slack until buying power of individuals had been restored.

By November, 1933, it became quite evident to unbiased observers that NRA and PWA were falling short of the mark. So, out of the Presidential hat came the CWA. Congress promptly provided funds so the Civil Works administration—and here is where professional reliever, Mr. Hopkins, came on the scene—could hire such unemployed as had not been absorbed by PWA or had not been restored to jobs in commerce and industry by NRA.

It was not long until CWA was as much in disrepute as the original schemes for providing employment. I believe it was in even greater disrepute because ordinary citizens could see the utter waste and the reckless expenditures of money occurring under CWA for its relief raking and stone gathering and other nonsensical job-creating results. CWA went the way of any unsound proposition.

Forward then came FERA. It was a proposition of emergency relief. Washington writers were deluged with speeches and statements that none should be allowed to starve. The spigots of the treasury were opened wide and $4,880,000,000 gushed forth. In every section of the country, federal money was distributed and distributors in Washington were none too careful of how they passed it out. In parallel lines with FERA, the politicians formed to the right. They saw the money and from precinct to pinnacle of politics, they were on the job and they have been on the job ever since.

Too Much Waste

Last year the President became convinced that there was too much waste; that FERA was building up a clientele of millions who were saying, both publicly and privately, that it was no use to work when the government would feed them and he ordered a quick change in course.

With this change in course came a locking of horns between Messrs. Hopkins and Ickes. Mr. Ickes was licked by the simple expedient of a new federal agency. Bounding forth came Mr. Hopkins' own brain child, WPA. While it stands for Works Progress administration, a different name, the initials, to those who have studied the situation, spell FERA and CWA combined.

The President announced to the country that "this business of relief must end." Those who could not be employed must be taken care of by the states and local governments and those who were employable would be taken off relief but they must do work for the funds which the federal government passed out to them.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, a likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter for his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. On the way to Montauk, where he intended to disappear, he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000.

"I'm not exactly looking for worms," Barry replied. "I want that position we were talking about, if I can get it, but, just now, I'm a lot more interested in this Kelly murder. You've read about that, I suppose."

Peter nodded.

"I saw the headlines after you left the Hambidges on Friday," he said. "I didn't bother about it much then. But, this morning, I found Saturday's Herald Tribune on my desk. And, of course, I'm always interested in murders."

"I know the boy who's accused of this crime," Barry said.

"You do? That's exciting. Tell me about it."

Barry did, omitting only the detail of Ridder's identity.

"I met them in Florida," he related. "Rogers worked in a hotel there. I liked the girl even then. She'd been putting up such a game fight to make a man of her husband, and was succeeding so wonderfully. I suppose I'm the only friend they've got around here, and that's why she came to me."

Winslow listened sympathetically.

"That sort of thing always gets me," he observed. "A woman tied up to some man who's not worthy of her, and in love with him."

"This boy's not so bad," Barry argued. "And it's a lead-pipe cinch that he didn't kill Kelly."

"Think so?"

"Dead sure."

"All right. Make me sure."

Barry tried.

"There was some one else coming when Jack left," he concluded. "If he came, he either found Kelly dead, in which case he'd've given the alarm, or he found Kelly alive, in which case, of course, Jack didn't kill him."

"Very ingenious," Peter remarked. "But what makes you think some one else was coming?"

"That's why Kelly fired Jack out."

"Who says so?"

"Jack—and Peggy."

"Not very conclusive," Peter objected.

"Who do you think did it?"

"I'm not concerned as to who did it," Peter declared. "Only as to who didn't."

"Jack didn't. You'd know that if you looked at him."

"I feel sorry for the girl. I'll go down to see Rogers. Somebody ought to've gone—long ago—to file an appearance. There shouldn't have been any preliminary hearings without proper representation."

"You'll take the case, then?"

"I suppose so. Now, how about that job I thought we might land at my brother's?"

"I certainly need it."

"Let's see if he's in."

"Get Jamison Winslow," he instructed the operator.

In a few minutes the phone rang.

"That you, Jimmy?" Peter said into it. "You've heard of John Clarke Ridder, haven't you? Well, his son's in here, and wants work. How about it? Got anything over there?"

The instrument made raucous noises.

"All right," Peter continued at last. "I'll send him around, and you talk to him.

"Chrysler building," he informed Barry, "and he's waiting for you."

"I don't know how to thank you."

"What for?"

"Mainly for helping two people in a lot of trouble."

Peter smiled once more.

"That inside-job theory sticks to my mind," Barry remarked. "Is there a Mrs. Mike Kelly?"

Peter laughed outright.

"You're determined to be Sherlock Holmes, aren't you?" he asked. "All right. There is a Mrs. Mike Kelly. I'd just finished reading about her. She sued for divorce recently and withdrew the case. Do you think that might indicate that she killed her husband?"

"Cherchez la femme, you know."

Peter laughed again.

"Search for the woman," he translated. "But, then, there appear to have been a good many women in Kelly's life. We mustn't jump at conclusions."

"No," Barry admitted. "No, I suppose not.

"All the same," he thought, the other side of the door, "it's pretty evident that a woman who sues for divorce is a little bit anxious to get rid of her husband."

But there was nothing doing at Jamison Winslow's.

"I'm sorry," he said, "but we're laying off men every day now. Why aren't you on your father's newspaper?"

"My father and I haven't been very friendly."

"So I've heard. But I've got an idea. That's what I wanted to talk to you about."

It was quite a simple idea.

"We place thousands of dollars' worth of advertising with The Globe. And I know the city editor pretty well. His name's Harwood. If I gave you a letter to Ernie, and he gave you a job, and you made good while the boss is in Europe, wouldn't that square things when he got back?"

Barry grinned.

"It might," he said, "and then again it might not."

"What I heard," Jamison Winslow went on, "was that your father wanted you in his business. If that's true, he'd certainly be pleased at your going in."

"I'd like to succeed on my own."

"Well, why not? We don't have to tell Harwood who we are. Not in the beginning, anyway."

"That is an idea," Barry agreed. "Since the row, I've been calling myself Barry Gilbert."

"Not a bad pen name," Jamison Winslow declared. "All right; we'll stick to it. I've a hunch that you'd make a good newspaper man."

"That's what your brother said."

Ten minutes later, Barry Gilbert—himself again, so to speak—was on his way to the office of The Globe.

The Globe occupied a new and imposing building in Thirty-ninth street. Asking for Mr. Harwood, Barry found himself in the city room. Men in their shirt sleeves sat at desks, smoking and pounding typewriters, and most of the people who had rushed in and out of the elevators rushed in and out of the double doors. Harwood's office proved to be a small and comparatively quiet cubby-hole just off the concourse.

He had always been a newspaper man. Square cut, not very tall, but with big hands and broad shoulders, his hair was as red as Barry's. He had been John Clarke Ridder's city editor when John Clarke was a cub reporter, and he remained John Clarke's city editor still. John Clarke's friend, too, with more real power, and ability, than any other man on The Globe.

Now he glanced at the Winslow letter, and grunted.

"Think you can write, I suppose?"

"Pretty sure I can't."

"Then what're you gonna do on a newspaper?"

"Get news."

Ernie Harwood looked him over.

"How?"

"Well, just now, it happens that I'm a friend of Jay Rogers."

"The fellow that killed Mike Kelly?"

"The fellow they say killed him."

"Yeah?"

Ernie squinted into the bowl of his pipe.

"How long have you known Jimmy Winslow?" he inquired.

"About half an hour. His brother asked him to get me a job."

"Peter Winslow?"

"Yes."

"Peter Winslow going to defend Rogers?" he snapped.

"Yes."

Ernie reached for a telephone.

"Peter Winslow's defending the Rogers boy," he barked into the instrument. "If it's straight, play it up in the next edition."

To Barry he said: "How did you get Winslow to take the case?"

For the second time, Barry related his story of meeting the Rogers in Florida. From there, he jumped to the visit of Mrs. Rogers, repeating what she had told him, and dilating upon their interview with the boy in the Tombs.

"What did he say?" Harwood asked.

"I don't feel at liberty to repeat that until I've spoken to Peter Winslow," Barry answered, "but it's given me two clues that I'd like to follow up."

"All right," Ernie said. "Follow 'em up. Your salary's fifty dollars a week. Report straight to me."

"Yes, sir."

"Wait a minute. I'll put you next to somebody who'll introduce you at police headquarters. We've got that angle covered, of course, but you'd better be in touch there. What I want you to do is to follow your own leads. Bring in something."

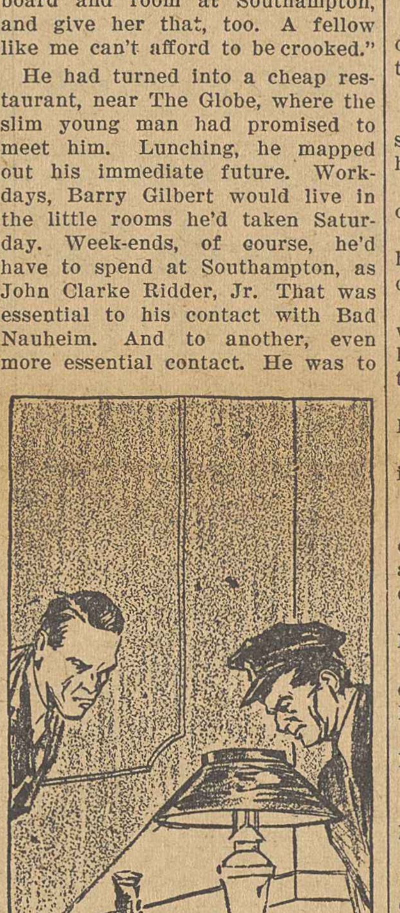
"Roth, come here!" he called. "I want you to take Mr. Gilbert down to the homicide bureau."

Nothing seemed entirely impossible that bright mid-May morning, as Barry swung into Broadway.

Up to now, he owed everything to his imposture—that first stake, the clothes he wore, Peter Winslow's favor, and all that had followed. They constituted an amazingly fortuitous chain of circumstances. But the chain had lifted him to solid ground. "It's up to me now," Barry said, feeling square with himself, and the world, and strangely gay and self-confident.

"I'm going to start right," he said, "by paying those bills, and giving Peggy the rest of that two hundred. I'm going to figure up my board and room at Southampton, and give her that, too. A fellow like me can't afford to be crooked."

He had turned into a cheap restaurant, near The Globe, where the slim young man had promised to meet him. Lunching, he mapped out his immediate future. Workdays, Barry Gilbert would live in the little rooms he'd taken Saturday. Week-ends, of course, he'd have to spend at Southampton, as John Clarke Ridder, Jr. That was essential to his contact with Bad Nauheim. And to another, even more essential contact. He was to dine at the Hambidges again next Friday, he recalled—with the lady from Boston to whom Pat must have written flattering things about him. A grand girl, Pat, and suddenly, as we have seen, not altogether unattainable. "If I make good," Barry thought, "I can tell her the truth about myself, and ask her to marry me. Why not? All this John Clarke Ridder, Jr., business'll just seem funny then."



It Was a Gruesome Exhibit—That Bottle Which Had Killed a Man.

The slim young man arrived in due time, and duly presented his charge at the homicide bureau. First, there was Tim Laugherty, as Irish as Barry, and with almost as ready a grin. They took to each other immediately. "Barry Gilbert," Tim repeated. "Well, the name's all right, anyway."

Tim regarded the Kelly murder as a closed case. So did MacDevitt, and every one else Barry met at headquarters. "The Rogers kid done it, that's sure," Tim declared. "This Filipino says he didn't let nobody else in that night."

"Maybe somebody else let himself in."

Tim smiled scornfully.

"How? There was a new lock on that door. Show him the keys, Mac."

Mac obliged.

"Here you are," he said. "It was chained to Kelly's pants button."

"Show him the decanter. Maybe he can get something out of that."

"Why not?" Mac laughed. "There's about half a pint in it."

It was a gruesome exhibit—that bottle which had killed a man. Real cut glass, and nearly a quarter full of reddish liquor. "Wonder why that didn't spill out," Barry ventured.

"Maybe the cork stopped it," Tom replied.

"They didn't find any finger prints?"

"No. The guy must have worn gloves."

"Listen," Barry ventured again. "Why weren't the Filipino's finger prints on the bottle—if he served it?"

"Guess he wore gloves, too. My butler always does!"

"Well, if he wore 'em—"

"I get you," Tim interrupted. "If the guy that done this wore gloves, and the Filipino wore gloves, why then maybe the Filipino's the guy that done this."

"Exactly."

"Say, you got a bean on you," the detective conceded, almost admiringly. "Of course, I still think we got the right party, but he's a cagey guy, that Oriental, and he didn't say nothing about gloves to me. Why don't we go round and see if he wears 'em?"

He didn't.

At least, not when he opened the front door.

"Say, Charlie," Tim began; "let us in. We want to ask you sumpin'. Do you wear gloves when you're serving stuff?"

"Sometimes."

"Did you wear 'em that night?"

"Maybe. I don't remember."

He was a thin, sallow youth, with the usual glossy black hair brushed back from his forehead. Nothing remarkable about him—not even his shiftiness. The three men stood in the broad hall of the Kelly house, and Charlie repeated the tale of admitting Rogers, and hearing a quarrel, and returning to his room until the visitor left.

"You were in your room when the row started, then?" Barry asked.

"Yes, sir."

"And you could hear the voices pretty plainly?"

"Yes, sir."

"You came upstairs, and then went back to your room, and stayed there until just as Rogers was leaving?"

"Yes, sir."

"Kelly must have been dead then, if Rogers killed him?"

"Yes, sir."

"But you didn't hear the sound of a blow in your room, nor the thud of a body falling?"

No answer.

"If you could hear voices downstairs, don't you think you'd've heard that, if it had happened?"

The Filipino looked down from one inquisitor to the other.

"Maybe I didn't stay in my room," he said at last, very slowly. "I don't remember."

Tim was about to press the point when there was the rasp of a latchkey being thrust into the lock of the front door.

Then the knob turned, and Mrs. Kelly entered.

She stopped short at sight of the intruders.

The door remained opened.

"Well, Mr. Laugherty!" she exclaimed. "So you've come back again? With a friend, too! Why don't you step in the parlor?"

Tim thanked her, and presented Barry.

"Glad to meet you," Mrs. Kelly declared. "Run along, you"—to the Filipino. "Come on in, boys!"

"You're forgetting your key," Barry said.

He took it out of the lock.

"It's a brand new key, isn't it?" he asked, casually.

"Sure," Mrs. Kelly answered. "It's a new lock. Mike had it put on only a few days ago."

"How many keys were there?"

"Two. That one, and Mike's."

Barry was scribbling on the back of an envelope.

Mrs. Kelly was a large woman, in her fifties. Her hair was dyed red—a brilliant, aggressive red unknown to Nature. But she was affable, and extremely good-humored. Evidently, not grieving herself to death about Mike.

"Just dropped around to see Charlie," Tim said. "Anything you want to know, Mr. Gilbert?"

"Just one thing. Where were you the night of the murder?"

Mrs. Kelly laughed.

"You don't read the papers much, do you?"

"Why?"

"Because all about that was in The Herald Tribune the morning after the body was found."

"All about what?"

"All about my being up in Harlem at a dance."

"And what time did you get home?"

"Around daylight."

"Did you let yourself in?"

"Sure."

"And you didn't wonder where Mike was?"

"I thought he was asleep. We didn't room together. The lights was all out."

"No light in the front room?"

"No."

"Sure?"

"Dead sure. Anything else?"

"No, thanks. I didn't mean to keep you so long. But one thing led to another."

"That's all right," Mrs. Kelly assured him. "I got nothing to hide. Drop around any time you feel like it."

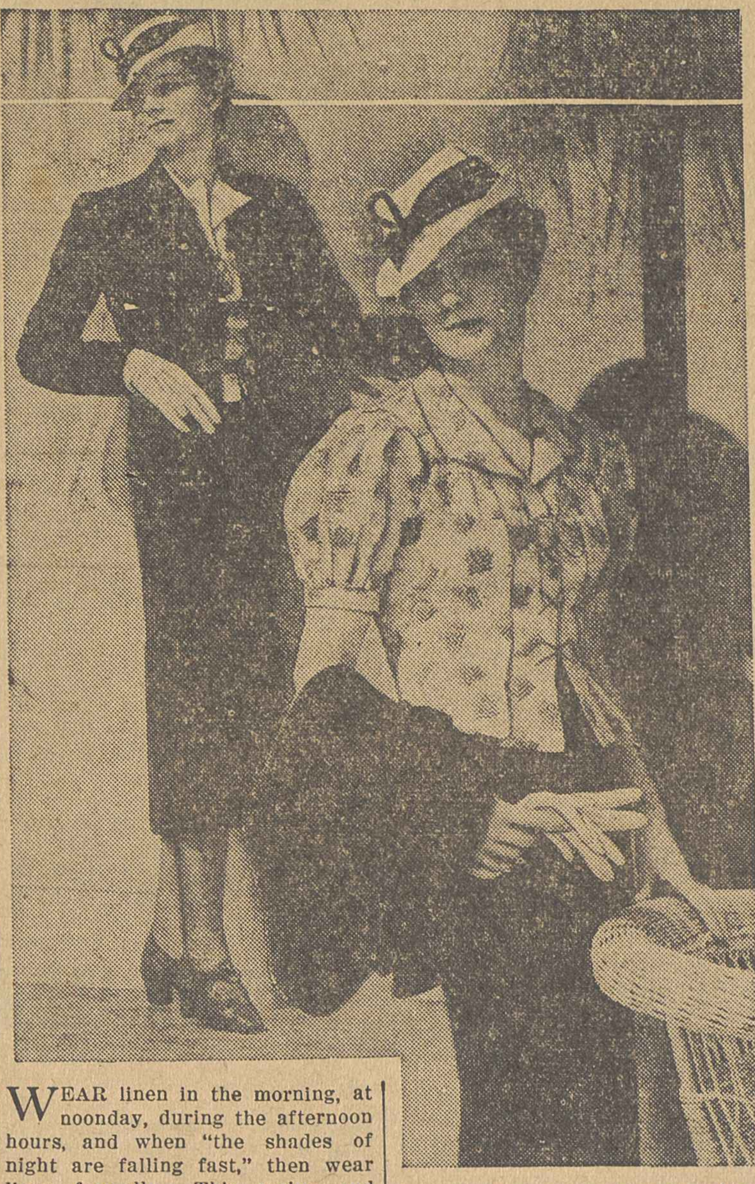
Purpose of Banding Birds

Banding is done to make possible the scientific study of the habits and travels of migratory birds. Investigators trap the birds, attach numbered bands and release them. Information concerning each banded bird is filed in Washington, and when the birds are captured again reports are filed and the data traced.

Print or Plain, Just So It's Linen

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



WEAR linen in the morning, at noonday, during the afternoon hours, and when "the shades of night are falling fast," then wear linen formally. This spring and summer is destined to go down in history as a banner linen season.

The beauty about modern linens is that through ingenious processing they are being made practically crush resistant.

The glory of this season's monotone linens is their remarkably handsome colorings. For the tailored jacket suit and sports and travel costumes, emphasis is on plain, firm, medium weight linens in such deep rich tones as Dubonnet and oxblood reds, dark blue, navy, also skipper blue, Biarritz green, the voguish spice brown, popular violet shades and other equally as attractive colors. Shrimp pink and coral hues are especially noted. As to white and natural tones they will lead in the summer parade.

Prints, perhaps, provide even more exciting news. Printed linens are making a bid for the formal as well as the daytime hours. Imagine an exquisitely sheer handkerchief linen (sheers in linen are latest word) in rust, brown and white done in an authentic paisley patterning. It is linens like this that are providing new thrills in the way of media for smart evening gowns.

If your fancy happens to run to modernistic florals in vivid coloring, we suggest that you select for your next party dress one of the very new gorgeous printed linens carried out in daring orange red and green on a navy background. Speaking generally in regard to printed linens, whether for day or evening wear, a liking is expressed for widely spaced bouquet arrangements, for bizarre peasant patternings, also motifs of Chinese character as well as mystic Far-East figures and hieroglyphics. Scroll designs that meander in linework all over the background are particularly good style.

The illustration demonstrates how smartly and effectively monotone linens combine with linen prints. To the left you see the suit, a new Creed model, as it looks with the jacket worn. This stunning ensemble is made of a dark green canvas type of linen for the classically tailored jacket and skirt, using crisp white linen for the blouse patterned in a green and tangerine linework crossbar print design. The linen is the finest possible quality, coming as it does from Moygashel, Ireland, noted for its beautiful high grade linens. Observe the slight fullness at top of jacket sleeve, giving the new broadened shoulder line. This skirt has a single knife pleat at its left front to give necessary fullness.

Removing the jacket of the suit, there comes to view, as pictured in the foreground, the smart chantel print Moygashel linen blouse. Its tangerine and green tones complement the monotone of the linen suit most pleasingly. The waistline of the blouse is slightly fitted. Two outstanding style details are the short puffed sleeves and the fact that instead of buttoning it is laced up the front, tiny cord lacing in and out through hand-embroidered eyelets.

JEWELRY FOR EVERY HOUR IN THE DAY

Jewelry for every hour in the day is now in vogue.

Collecting precious, real jewelry has become the fad of ladies of fashion.

Women who already own fine collections of jewels are having them re-set. Now that gold settings are again smart, many colored stones enhanced by this treatment are being remodeled.

The suit is the perfect setting for a fine fob watch—a beautiful wrist watch, or a brooch or a clip watch.

Brooches, worn at the neck of the new frilly blouses are smart and if they support a fine and distinguished jewel, they give tone and elegance to the street tailleur.

Pearls are worn with all types of blouses. Pearl earrings are rapidly gaining in popularity.

No jewel or decoration of any kind is as uniformly becoming and flattering to the wearer as pearls.

Fluffy Bow at Neck Gives Ingenue Air to Wearer

A new trick of the moment is to fasten a fluffy bow made of dozens of layers of pleated net, with a little nosegay of spring flowers in the middle, at the neckline of your new spring print. You'd be surprised at the gay ingenue air it gives you.

Or you may choose one of the new "lace paper doily" collar and cuff sets, to give a last minute air to that long-suffering black crepe daytime dress.

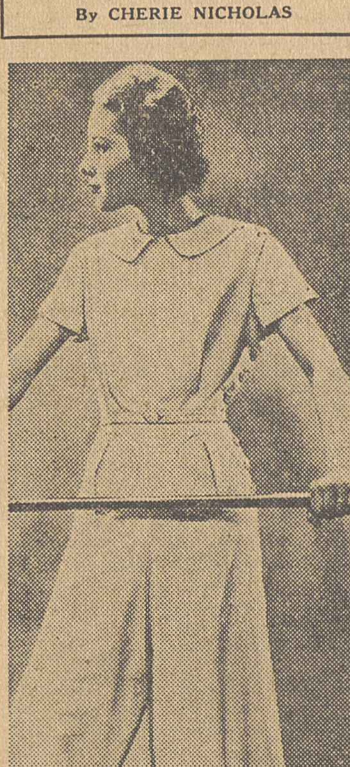
The new neckwear is shown in all the accessory colors of the moment, such as violet, tulip pink, rust, London tan, mimosa and, of course, white.

New Shades

Spring's top ranking colors include imperial blue, aurora, Formosa blue, spinner's red, the zinnia shades, petunia and Devon green.

SMART FOR SPORTS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



The divided skirt costume is recognized as eminently practical for active sports wear. This simply cut dress is tailored to perfection of quality-kind linen imported from Moygashel, the finest flax producing section of the north of Ireland. It buttons up under the collar like a pinafore, with buttons running down under the arm. Its divided skirt means all the action you want on the golf links or tennis court.

New Millinery

The new millinery imports stress beauty and a flattering appeal rather than just smartness.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

Did you ever hear this one: A prejudice is a judgment that ripened too soon.

Talladega County is expected to get the first allotment of highway projects of the new type paving in Alabama, a composition of cotton and asphalt. It is proposed to use this type of paving on the road from Talladega to Sylacauga.

Miss Martha Nicholson, Selma, and Miss Martha Dean, Bangor, represented Alabama College at the Alabama Federation of College Women in Minneapolis recently. It was a national meeting of athletic association members, featuring round table discussions.

A detachment of home-town supporters of Pete Jarman, from Livingston and York, in Sumter County, spent a short while in Montevallo Monday afternoon. The group was composed of Joe Patton, of Livingston; E. C. Godfrey, sheriff of Sumter County; T. M. Tartt, Livingston; C. L. Gaston and Glenn Kerp, of York.

WHAT'S IN A NAME ANYHOW

Bishop Atticus, of the esteemed Montgomery Advertiser, comes out now to remind us that he said "parity" was not what we wanted when that question was before the legislature as a proposal for relief of the school crisis.

Also, he asserts that educational leaders have abandoned their quest for "parity," and are now gunning for something they choose to call "earmarked funds" for the schools. Maybe that is all right. We would accept it under the "earmarked" ~~label, if we~~ know it does what the State should do — provide ample money to run the schools a full term.

It is somewhat assuring, at least, for Bishop Atticus to conclude his column on the subject by saying:

> Earmarked funds will insure a seven months term for elementary schools, and nine months term for the high schools. And on that line they will be able, in the writer's opinion, to present unanswerable arguments. And if they will stick to that proposal, instead of advocating additional taxes, they will get somewhere.

It matters little, it seems to us, what we shall call it — parity or earmarked funds. The thing of utmost importance is to find some way to provide the money whereby Alabama's schools can be operated for a full term each year.

If the people of Alabama will have no increase in taxes, which seems to be obvious enough, that certainly is no excuse for leaving the fight for adequate school terms. Rather, we take it as a more positive and pressing challenge to those in positions of leadership and influence whose duty it is to see that public education is accorded its rightful place as one of the most necessary functions of the State's government.

We do not believe the solution of the school crisis is such a puzzling problem as it is made to appear. The trouble is, we believe, that somebody up the line is not willing to face the question in the manner the people of Alabama want it done.

CHAPERONE CIGARETTES

Chaperone your cigarettes. They shouldn't go out alone! Each year the cost of unchaperoned cigarettes is appalling. We watch them closely while we are using them, then we quit looking after them while they burn to death on an expensive rug or piece of furniture.

Cigarettes tossed carelessly away account for numerous fires every day in the year. They are one of the chief causes of fires in every country on earth, and it is one of our most useless losses. If each person would see that the fire is off before he throws away the used stub, the fire menace would be greatly reduced and the insurance rates would be reduced in proportion. It would save money for every home owner in America and the uninsured loss would disappear to a large extent.

Chaperone that cigarette. Don't let it go out alone.—From The Hale County News.

"SQUARING THE CIRCLE"

The Play "Squaring the Circle," by Valentine Katayev, is being rehearsed by a cast of seniors, it having been selected as their class play to be given September 9 in Palmer Hall at Alabama College. The cast includes Miss Patricia Swift, Mary Nall Kendrick, Helen Hewell, Grace Wilson, with others to be selected. It is under the direction of Miss Ellen-Haven Gould, of the faculty.

A WORTHY EFFORT TOWARD PROPER UNDERSTANDING

The mass meeting held in Montevallo last Saturday night under the sanction and at the suggestion of leaders and representatives of organized labor groups appears to have been a sensible and practical approach toward a worthwhile end that is often missed by the use of common political methods.

Briefly stated, this was an effort to give the political candidates a schance to express themselves about some things which concern labor. But no suggestions were made to candidates as to what those things were. Merely an invitation was extended to the candidates to come and express themselves.

Labor wanted to see if the candidates had observed or become impressed with the things which are considered important issues at the present time. Labor has a right to know if candidates for public office are concerned about things that constitute the welfare of the working man.

It was in the exercise of this right, without naming any issues, that labor invited the candidates to the meeting Saturday night. It was a sensible way in which to approach the matter, and a workable way to obtain the desired information.

Apparently the meeting was altogether worthwhile. The candidates came or sent a personal representative.

Those citizens attending the meeting came away as cool and undisturbed as they went. They felt they had been benefitted by hearing and seeing the candidates in a fair and impartial atmosphere, free from the camouflage of partisan debate and subterfuge.

We commend the labor organizations of this district for this gesture.

All people and all groups of people have certain interests that are vital to them. They must depend upon public officials for the incorporation of those interests in the laws of the land. They must depend upon the judicial machinery for the proper interpretation of their rights under the laws, economic, social and otherwise. The wheel must be balanced.

Candidates sponsored by and tied to one group are likely to be biased or partisan, and not properly representative of another group.

Organized labor had no candidates. They sought to know and understand all the candidates, and then exercise their judgment in voting for the ones they chose to support.

That is fair and much more commendable than hurling a large and composite group of our citizenship blindly and uninformed into the maelstrom of personal and partisan political conflict.

We believe the mass meeting Saturday night marks the institution of a policy that will be pursued in a more general application by organized labor in the future. And well may it be done.

Urge to Believe Scandal Is Theme of "These Three"

The unhappy observation that people are more eager to believe evil than good of their fellow man provided Lillian Hellman, brilliant Broadway playwright, with the theme of "These Three," her new screenplay for Samuel Goldwyn, which is showing at the Strand, Montevallo, Thursday and Friday of this week, with Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon and Joel McCrea in the title roles.

The powerful story, which offers picturegoers something entirely new in the way of gripping dramatic situations, shows how one scandalous lie, the invention of a spiteful twelve-year-old schoolgirl, hurled ruin, like a bombshell, into the lives of three innocent adults, who otherwise would have led a happy, peaceful existence.

Thus does Miss Hellman, who is under a long-term contract to Goldwyn, establish her point: Had the child said only complimentary things, who would have paid any attention to her?

"It is one of the tragedies of civilization," observes Miss Hellman, "that the nice things we know or hear about our fellowmen seem of little importance. We make no effort to pass them on.

"But just let us chance to hear or suspect something derogatory or detrimental and we seem to become human systems of rapid communication."

The victims of the vicious lie that motivates the story are Karen Wright and Martha Dobie, two young college women who establish a small girl's school in New England, and Dr. Joseph Cardin, the young local doctor-fiance of Karen, whom Martha secretly also loves. The roles are played by Merle Oberon, Miriam Hopkins, and Joel McCrea, respectively, while the part of Mary Tilford, the 12-year-old "heavy" of the piece, is played by Bonita Granville, who has been pronounced a genuine "find" and is said to give a performance so brilliant that it raises her role almost to stellar importance.

Miss Hellman has shown a remarkable grasp of a child's capacity for rationalizing by depicting the young villain as launching her utterly ruthless "whispering campaign" for no better reason than that she does not like to do her school work. Undoubtedly, neither this child nor any other 12-year-old has a sufficient acumen to realize the damage that can be wrought by a vicious lie, but, it is the author's contention, even a child of these years seems to know instinctively that her elders will give her the intelligence she has to offer in their wholehearted attention when tinged with scandal.

WAPI Leased To Birmingham Man

Montgomery, Ala., May 4.—The executive board of Radio Station WAPI at Birmingham Monday leased the state-owned station to Ed Norton, of Birmingham, but declined to reveal the rental price or length of the contract.

The station is now leased by Bascom Hopson, of Birmingham, for $775 monthly and his lease expires in July, 1937.

The executive board called for bids for a 15-year rental of the station but declined to state whether Norton's contract would cover that period. The board, in asking for the bids, asked that they cover the present 5,000-watt station and a possible 50,000-watt station if the petition before the Federal Communications Commission for the increase is approved.

Women Turn Confidently to CHERIE NICHOLAS

Nationally Known Fashion Authority

CONCERNING styles and fashions, women desire only that information which they know is authentic. They demand accurate reporting of the new clothing trends, with candid portrayals of the described garments through truthful illustrations. They seek the correct, the latest and finest—but never the bizarre, the extreme or sensational. They wish their fashion writer to speak of smartness and good taste, of what is practical for the average woman, and [a very important item] of garments and hats they can find in their own local stores and shops.

Small wonder, therefore, that women turn confidently to Cherie Nicholas, whose illustrated fashion articles appear regularly in this newspaper. Miss Nicholas tells what the nation's foremost designers and creators of fine styles decree shall be right for the weeks to come.

You will benefit greatly through reading these authoritative articles. Tell your friends about them.

Ball Player Feuds Are Always Sure to Be "Gate" Tonic

AFTER too many seasons overburdened with brotherly love, I have been noting recent doings of the Dodgers and Giants with considerable glee. In baseball, as in most other businesses, there ever are too many people eager to pat you on the back with a knife. It is much more pleasant to see the boys carrying on in the open and—as the magnates should know but always seem to forget—it brings far better results at the gate.

Undoubtedly such knowledge added greatly to Ty Cobb's stature as a ball player. So far as I know he never spiked an opponent intentionally and, off the field, he was a genial citizen. Yet when he came into a base with high-flung spikes glittering you felt that he regarded the fielder as a natural enemy. In press box or in bleachers that feeling always caused pulses to strum faster.

McGraw

It is just as true that John Joseph McGraw would never have been the greatest manager of all times if he had acted like a Girl Scout. Opponents were opponents to him and he made no exceptions. Indeed, no small part of his fame came because, when engaged in giving his personal and undivided attention to a feud, he often went far afield to assure the camp followers and the distant kinfolk of his enmity. Once, for instance, his ancient Chicago foes were in town for a series. That was in the glowing baseball year of 1908 and feelings were running high anyhow. When the Chicago baseball writers arrived at the Polo Grounds press gate they saw a notice pasted there. It stated simply and starkly that, by order of J. J. McGraw, they were not to be permitted to enter the park that afternoon.

Perhaps this did not serve any useful purpose in deciding events upon the field, but I am not so sure about it. At least it convinced both fans and players that there was nothing halfway about the famous manager's likes and dislikes.

Burleigh Grimes is another who might be placed high up on the list of haters of opposing uniforms. Once Frankie Frisch bumped into him when the pitcher was covering first base. It was an incident similar to the Van Mungo-Dick Bartell cause celebre of recent date.

For years after that, whenever Frisch faced Grimes, it was 100 to 1 that the first ball would be thrown somewhere in the neighborhood of Frankie's head. By the same token it was necessary for Burleigh to take a few extra precautions when arriving in the vicinity of second base.

The era already had arrived when the game was to overflow with sweetness and light. So numerous folks did their meddlesome best to arrange a peace treaty.

Tinker and Evers Rose on Mutual Hate

Most other long term misunderstandings are ended as quickly when old-time foes are united in a mutual cause. Yet once there was a feud which must confuse the theorists who babble that all the best in sports life is destroyed by battling.

That was when Joe Tinker was at short stop and Johnny Evers was at second base for the Cubs. After clawing at one another as they rolled over the clubhouse floor one day, they decided that frequent fist fights could never settle the issue between them. They agreed to quit speaking to one another.

By all the copybook maxims this silent hatred should have shattered them as well as the team. Instead, Tinker outplayed himself each day so that he might excel Evers. Johnny strove to reach new heights so that he might tower above his unloved neighbor. It was then that the most famous double-play combination in history, Tinker to Evers to Chance, was born while the Cubs were battling their way to various pennants.

Naturally I do not advocate drastic measures yet it is all too true that they have been far too frequent moments when the silence of the ball parks has been broken only by the sighs of fans who felt that they had spent their money in vain.

NOT in the box score: Tom Yawkey and P. K. Wrigley, the youthful baseball magnates, are being urged to back a new pro football league . . . The citizens of Red Bank, N. J., are insisting that Mike Jacobs become a member of the city council . . . Even though his Dodgers occasionally give him ample cause, Casey Stengel has not been up in the air since 1916. He went up that time because his teammates dared him to m[illegible] an exhibition airplane flight with Ruth Law, then the world's premiere aviatrix . . . Jed Harris, the play producer, once was the violin artist in a saloon operated by Bob Fitzsimmons.

The colors of John Hay Whitney will be seen on metropolitan tracks for the first time this year with Singing Wood likely to be the racing commissioner's best bet. The silks are similar to those of his mother's Greentree Stable, except that a white cap goes along with the pink and black blouse . . . Adolfo Luque likes Ken Maynard movies so much that he would almost as soon see one as pitch a no-hit game. . . . Vince Coll, the celebrated and departed patron of beer running and other allied arts, still is mourned by the lads who sold tickets to sports events. He used to pay bonuses for the best in the house and then slip the salesman $20 tips . . . In addition to being manager of the Norwegian Turin Society Soccer club, William Anderson also is chairman of the New York S. F. Association Indoor Six-a-Side competition.

If Joe Louis ever tours Europe it will be strictly as a paying customer. He has been offered big enough dough to perform on the continent, but, having burned their fingers with last winter's Cuban fiasco, his managers will take no more chances.

Harry Danning of the Giants will bet that he can finish one-two-three in a foot race with all the catchers in big-time baseball. He also likes to inform those who sneer at his speed that he beat the fleet George Davis in a special sprint last summer . . . Tom Baker, the very good young Dodger right-hander, wishes (for some unknown reason) that he was a southpaw.

Recalling Early Trials of Francis Ouimet

Francis Ouimet

In 1910, 1911, 1912 a lean Massachusetts youngster who once had been a caddy tried his luck in the National Amateur Golf championships. Each time he failed to qualify by a single stroke. The next year he scored one of the greatest upsets in the history of the game, winning the national open in the playoff with the famous Britons, Vardon and Ray. His name, of course, is Francis Ouimet.

Jerome D. Travers, rated as one of the steadiest golfers of all time and as a man who rose to the heights under fire, played the Sandwich course in 74 on his last round before the start of the British amateur championship. The next day, when the title play had started, he had a 90. There was no alibi. The same thing had happened to him that could happen to any duffer. For the first—and perhaps the only—time in his life the great champion had permitted his nerves to work themselves up to such a state that he had been awake all night shivering over the prospect of making a poor showing.

American league players are complaining that their circuit is all out of balance. They claim that the league should have loaned money to the St. Louis Browns so that they could have taken advantage of some of the Philadelphia offerings . . . Among other things Buddy Hasset is a cross-word puzzle fan.

Young Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt is so boxing conscious that he has named one of his two-year-olds Brown Bomber . . . Dogs run truer to form in races than do horses and neither the condition of the track nor the weather affects them much.

Brief description of the forlorn Athletics: "They look like money in the bank" . . . Horsemen are complaining about the amount of attention given to the "Electric Eye" at Jamaica. While this device is being installed the track is so cluttered up that they have to break their gee-gees from the first turn and then gallop them around the back stretch. Such antics, they say, greatly interfere with serious training.

Although his home towners arranged a "Berkeley Bell Day" when he visited Austin with the pro tennis troupe the Texas net star has a secret sorrow. He envies that sort of fame which caused a sandwich to be named after William T. Tilden . . . Because he departed for home with $300 worth of borrowed baseballs in his valise the Braves cut Pitcher Jack Scott's salary $1,000 one season.

The average dog racing kennel contains from twelve to fourteen dogs. In the four states where racing is legal five kennels must be represented in each event . . . When he was wearing first long trousers around Mulberry Bend Francis Albertanti, the fight publicist, was press agent for Albert Spalding, the violinist.

2. Put the second finger nail under the pen-holder.
3. Put the upper corner of the thumb nail against the pen-holder, opposite the first joint of the forefinger.
4. Bend the joints of the thumb outward.
5. Keep the pen-holder up against the side of the forefinger.
6. Keep the forefinger straightened.
7. Keep the wrist straight and off the desk or book.
8. Keep both points of the pen on the paper alike.
9. Keep the top of the pen-holder pointing to the right shoulder.
10. Keep the arms and paper in line.

KEY TO CORRECT POSITION

(b) Sit square to the desk facing it.

(c) Sit close to the desk without touching it.

(d) Rest both forearms on the desk just forward of the elbows.

(e) Rest the right hand on the under corner of the little finger nail at B.

(g) Rest both feet squarely on the floor; the left in advance of the right.

DO YOU remember the days when "penmanship" was one of the most important subjects taught in district school?

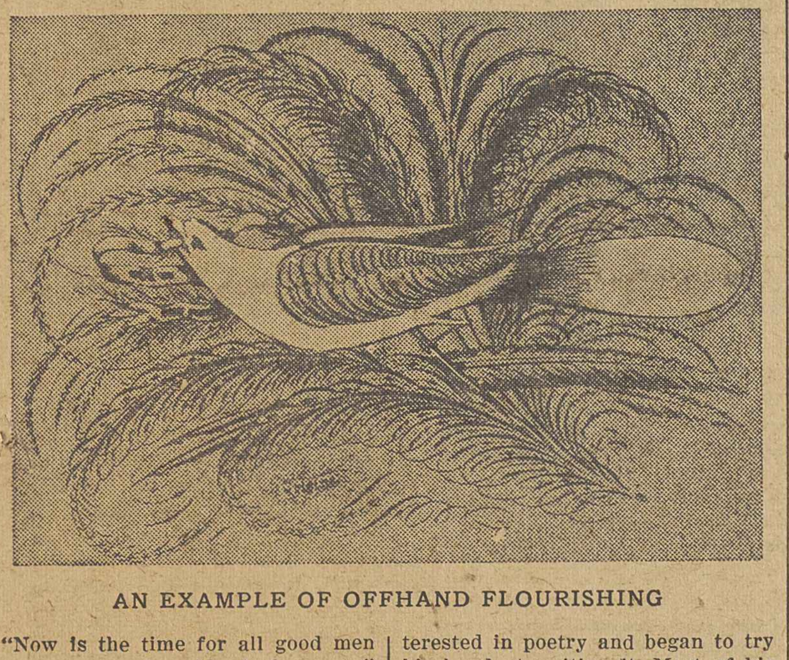
And do you remember how you dreaded the coming of the daily "writing practice" because it meant that, for a period which seemed interminable, you had to sit stiffly erect at your desk (See "Key to Correct Position"); hold your pen just so (See "Key to Correct Pen-Holding") and write in your "copybook" such precepts as "Practice is the best of all instructors" and "Receive an injury rather than do one" and "Wisely improve the Present, it is thine." And woe be to you if you dipped your pen too deeply in the inkwell (that kind that had the little iron lid on it—remember?) and you made a big blot on the page!

And do you remember how careful you were, under the watchful eye of "teacher," to "put the forefinger flat upon the barrel of the pen-holder," to "keep the top of the pen-holder pointing to the right shoulder" and to "use the whole arm in writing with an easy, flowing motion?" And then, as soon as she had passed along to the next earnest exponent of the fine art of penmanship, do you remember how quickly your forefinger "humped up" on the pen-holder so that you were soon clutching it in a death-like grip and you forgot all about that "easy, flowing motion of the whole arm"? Remember how you "hunched over" the desk and with your tongue sticking out, as though it could help push the pen, you hurried through writing the required number of lines in your copybook so that you could be among the first to dash for the door when "teacher" said "That will be enough writing practice for today . . . put away your books for recess?"

Perhaps, though, you weren't one of those who dreaded that daily writing practice and looked upon it as an ordeal to be gotten through with as quickly and painlessly as possible. Perhaps you were one of those who believed with the copy books that "practice is the best of all instructors." So you were faithful in that practice because you wanted your "handwriting to look nice" when you wrote in a friend's autograph book some such sentiment as

My pen is poor,
My ink is pale,
But my love for you
Will never fail.

And then, of course, there was always the possibility of that further reward of having people say of you "he writes a fine hand" or else "his handwriting is just like copperplate engraving." For those were the days when Americans took pride in their penmanship, when "offhand flourishing" was a real art and when, one might almost say, the pen was truly mightier than the sword.



AN EXAMPLE OF OFFHAND FLOURISHING

Today thousands of clattering typewriters chronicle the fact that "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the party" or that "The quick brown fox jumps over the lazy dog." Today speed, rather than artistry, is the demand in writing. So today the name of Platt Rogers Spencer means but little to most Americans although they perpetuate his fame when they use such an expression as "his fine Spencerian hand."

But there was a time when his name was a synonym for elegant script and his style of penmanship was a model for school children all over the United States. So in this machine age, when the typewriter has made chirography a lost art and the hasty American scrawl has become notorious, it seems worth while to tell again the story of Platt Rogers Spencer, the Ohio farm boy who wanted to become a minister and who, thwarted in that ambition, turned his talents to the task of teaching a whole nation good handwriting and became famous as the "father of penmanship."

Spencer was born September 7, 1801, on a poverty-ridden farm in the little settlement of East Fishkill in Dutchess county, New York. He was the eleventh and youngest child of Caleb Spencer, a native of Rhode Island and a veteran of the Revolution, and Jerusha Covell Spencer, a native of the town of Chatham on Cape Cod. Caleb Spencer died when his youngest child was five years old. Soon afterwards Jerusha Spencer sold the farm and moved with her brood of 11 across the Hudson river to the sparsely settled community of Windham in Greene county.

Although the management of the Widow Spencer's new farm kept her busy, she took a keen interest in passing on to her children her education, scanty as it was, and in developing their minds. When her youngest-born, Platt, first began to form letters with charcoal on a board she recognized his ability and encouraged him in his writing.

In those days western emigration was in the air. In 1806 the first canvas-topped Conestoga wagons, laden with household furniture, had trailed across the Alleghenies into the far west of Ohio, at that time called the Western Reserve. Mrs. Spencer talked the matter over with her older sons, and it was decided to sell the farm and go to Ohio. In 1810 the family started westward. After many days of slow, difficult going, they arrived in the Western Reserve. They halted in the forest at a little collection of log cabins, the beginnings of the town of Jefferson in Ashtabula county, Ohio.

In this pioneer settlement Platt grew up, helping on the farm in the summer and in the winter combining household chores with reading and writing. Paper was unprocurable, but he wrote in the snow and on the sand and with charcoal on the floor.

The traveling cobbler who visited each farm in winter to make a year's supply of shoes for the family lent the boy his chalk and let him write on the large pieces of sole leather that were waiting to be cut up. The family was proud of his skill and, as a special treat, on Sundays his mother allowed him to write her favorite Scripture texts in ink on the flyleaves of her precious Bible.

When Platt was twelve years old a district school was opened in a one-room log cabin in Conneaut, ten miles away. A young Vermont Yankee was the schoolmaster. Platt walked the ten miles to and from school throughout the winter. He was not a particularly sociable youth, and being serious-minded he partitioned off his desk in one corner, where he devoted much time to his beloved writing.

The schoolmaster soon discovered this pupil's bent and kept him occupied furnishing copies of lessons for the school, textbooks being expensive and very difficult to procure. Spencer himself walked 20 miles barefoot in the late fall to get a copy of Daboll's Arithmetic that he had heard was for sale cheap. On the way home he slept in a barn, as he was too bashful to ask for lodging, and his only food was a raw turnip.

This hard and scanty existence seemed only to foster his love of grace and "elegance." He grew interested in poetry and began to try his hand at writing it. Most of his verses were dedicated to the art of penmanship, and were on some such theme as this:

The tongue is not the only way
  Through which the active mind is heard,
But the good pen as well can say,
  In tones as sweet, a gentle word.
Then speed we on this art to gain
  That leads all others in its train,
Embalms our task from day to day,
  Bids budding virtues live for aye,
Brings learning home the mind to store,
  Before our schoolday scenes are o'er.

For Spencer schooldays were soon over. During his third winter he taught his first writing classes in the log schoolhouse. When summer came he ended his school career to become clerk and bookkeeper in a general store. Those three winters of schooling were all the formal education he ever had.

When he was twenty-two he decided to go to college to prepare for the ministry. But a taste for liquor, inherited from his father and aggravated by the prevalent drinking customs, was too strong for him. He failed to pass the entrance requirements.

If Spencer had not been a hard drinker, the course of penmanship in the United States might never have felt the influence of his brilliant pen. When the ministry was closed to him he turned to teaching handwriting and traveled through Ohio from town to town and even from farm to farm, gathering pupils around him.

He revisited New York state in 1825, taught there two years and returned to Ohio, where in 1828 he married Miss Persis Duty, a young teacher who had caught the midwestern pioneer spirit. They settled in Ashtabula and then moved to Geneva, where they lived most of the time except for short periods in Jefferson and Oberlin.

On the farm he took over, he built Jericho, the log seminary. Before long, people gathered from all parts of Ohio, the Midwest and from eastern states to study under him.

Meanwhile he worked to strike a mean between the labored fullness of the round penmanship hand and the rigid sharpness of the angular.

As an expert penman Spencer did not follow rules, he made them; and the versatility of his imagination was the despair of those who imitated him. His brain was particularly fertile in inventing varying forms for the same letters. One of his specimen sheets shows the capital letter S written in ten different ways, all simple, graceful and legible.

Beyond simple handwriting Spencer was a genius in the fascinating art of "offhand flourishing." This was the use of the swinging pen stroke to create swans, eagles, stags and palm trees, full of intricate shaded lines and swirls. The ability to make these drawings and designs flow from his pen increased the admiration in which he was held by his contemporaries. He believed, however, that "flourishing" of this sort was a separate art and rarely introduced it into his copybooks for the purpose of "showing off," as did many less talented penmen who came after him.

In 1832 temperance hit Ohio and Spencer became a total abstainer. When it became known that he had reformed, popular sentiment demanded his election to the office of treasurer of Ashtabula county, an office he held for 12 years.

Spencer published his first copybook in 1848, long after his fame had spread through the East and Middle West. The volume was tremendously popular and firmly established Spencer's fame and fortune. Penmanship became the study of the nation and Spencerian copybooks could not be published fast enough to meet the demand.

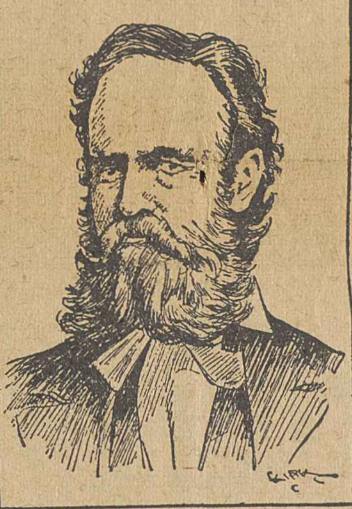
When business men began demanding better penmen in their offices and the Spencerian system's fame spread, Platt R. Spencer went to Pittsburgh, where he founded the Spencerian Commercial college in 1852. Illness forced him to close it two years later.

In 1861, assisted by his sons, he revised the system and produced a new series of copybooks, printed by Phinney & Company, Buffalo. They were transferred in 1869 to the house of Ivison, Blakeman, Taylor & Company, New York.

This modest copybook became a best seller in the days when best sellers were few and called by a different name. During 1870, more than a million copies were sold.

He traveled about the United States teaching and lecturing. Finally, the man who had failed to get into college as a student because he drank accepted a call to Eclectic Institute at Hiram, Ohio (today Hiram college), as professor of penmanship.

While he was there a poorly clad, self-taught farm lad came to the college as a student. He supported himself by ringing the college bell and sweeping out the buildings. He studied under Spencer and later in life wrote a letter to one of Spencer's sons praising his father. The letter was signed "James A. Garfield."



PLATT R. SPENCER

Soon the untaught hand that feebly guides the pen
Shall sweep the curve in busier
  haunts of men;
Where each day's doings on life's active stage,
Arrayed in light, shall crown the well-writ page.

When Spencer's wife died in 1862 after a long illness, the master penman seemed to lose heart and began to age rapidly. In the Geneva public library, first called the Spencer memorial library, is a faded "flourish" on a bit of yellowed paper which bears these lines:

Life is line and may it be
Well form'd, connected, tasteful, free;
And many a happy year be thine,
Ere death shall close thy perfect line.

Death closed Spencer's well-formed line on May 16, 1864. Business colleges throughout the country draped the portrait of their master in black and former students of his wrote encomiums on his career and his character in their best Spencerian hand.

Today by the side of a road near Geneva stands a modest granite boulder. It bears a bronze tablet which tells the passer-by that one mile north of the boulder once stood "one of America's first writing schools, the cradle of her system of penmanship. Within its crude walls Platt R. Spencer conducted summer institutes from 1853 to 1863, expounding the beauties of his system, the Spencerian, to teachers coming from all parts of the country." Not far away is Evergreen cemetery. In it stands a large monument, bearing a large familiar script over a quill. Under the names of Platt R. Spencer and Persis Duty Spencer is this inscription: "Their lives were kindly, earnest and beneficent."

That epitaph might well have been a copybook maxim for later generations of Americans to write in a fine Spencerian hand.

Septic Tank Is Good Investment

Water-Tight Arrangement Is Sure to Hold Sewage Bacterial Digestion.

By W. C. Krueger, Extension Agricultural Engineer, New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station.—WNU Service.

In early spring when the ground is saturated with water and drainage is impaired by frozen subsoil, the advantages of a septic tank over a cesspool or dry pit for sewage disposal are easily recognized.

Cesspools located in open gravelly or sandy soils operate freely in disposing of sewage but this free movement often causes contamination of nearby water supplies. Cesspools located in tight soils soon seal themselves and become inoperative.

Septic tanks, on the other hand, are watertight and of a size sufficient to hold the sewage long enough to insure bacterial digestion. There is a second digestion chamber where the effluent undergoes additional digestion and aeration and from this chamber it is dispersed by means of a field tile disposal system laid underground in areas removed from the water supply. Septic tanks will operate from four to ten years, before removal of undigestible materials becomes necessary.

Septic tanks may be purchased ready-made or they may be constructed in place. Construction does not present any difficulties to the average workman and the cost of materials for a farm-built tank is generally lower than the price of purchased units. A frequent mistake is the installing of septic tanks which are too small. Tanks should have an approximate capacity of 100 gallons per person in the family.

Pruning Peach Trees in View of Obtaining Growth

Peach trees can be pruned successfully at any time during the dormant season. Some growers prefer to prune early in the fall in the belief that the wounds are well healed over by spring before the sap flow starts. Others claim that spring pruning is best owing to danger of freezing the wood during severely cold weather. Their theories, however, are hardly borne out by tests.

There is one distinct advantage to late winter pruning as compared to early winter pruning. If one knows there is no chance of getting a peach crop because of excessively low temperatures during the winter, a different method of pruning can be used than when there is a probability of having a fruit crop. If it is known that owing to extremely low temperatures there will be no fruit, the trees can be pruned more rigidly with a view to obtaining a maximum tree growth, whereas if there is likely to be a peach crop, one can prune with a view of obtaining a maximum yield of peaches. At any rate, pruning should be done in time for the spraying for leaf curl. A tree that has been well pruned is much easier to spray and less spray dope is needed to spray it.—Missouri Farmer.

Pasturing Sheep

To pasture sheep in mature orchards is a common practice which seems generally satisfactory, says the Rural New-Yorker. The question of graining would be the same as for any other pasture system. It would vary entirely with the kind and abundance of the pasture in question. If on good mixed grass, or blue grass, and pastured not over seven head per acre, such pasture will usually keep the ewes in good condition until pasture starts getting short in late summer or early fall.

Old Oats for Seed

Seed oats, like corn and soy beans, is disappointing this year in germination. The prolonged wet weather at harvesting and threshing last summer damaged the oats. L. E. Thatcher of the Ohio experiment station suggests that two-year-old oats may be used if the seed is in good condition, free from musty odor and has good germination. However, says a writer in the Ohio Farmer, the 1934 crop was light in weight and much of it may not be suitable for seed.

Former Caddy to Edward VIII Is Given Help by the King

Prospects brightened for J. H. Whitethread, a former caddy to the king when the latter was prince of Wales.

Whitethread wrote a letter to his majesty saying his family was in desperate straits. He had been jobless for five years, he said. The king sent $10.

Since that was made known, money and clothes have been sent from all directions to Whitethread at his home.

"The Informer," A Gripping Character Picture, At The Strand Saturday

Reaching supreme heights in characterization and in strength of emotional appeal, RKO - Radio's "The Informer," showing at the Strand Theatre, Saturday of this week, ranks as one of the most powerful dramas ever brought to the screen.

Superbly enacted by a brilliant cast, the picture, under the directorial genius of John Ford, brings to vivid, unforgettable life the characters and scenes of Liam O'Flaherty's widely-read and much-discussed novel. Here, indeed, is drama; stark and real; poignantly human.

In the role of "The Informer," Victor McLaglen reaches even greater heights than those to which he attained with his universally praised performance in "The Lost Patrol."

A brilliant addition to the roster of Hollywood talent is Margot Grahame, blonde star of the English stage and cinema. She gives a magnificient performance as a woman who clings to her man through storm and strife. Other sterling performances are contributed by Preston Foster, Heather Angel, Wallace Ford, Una O'Connor, J. M. Kerrigan and Donald Meek.

Against the colorful background of Dublin, Ireland, the picture has the troubled years just after the World War as its period. With the desire to get money for Katie Madden, his sweetheart, Gypo Nolan, a human derelict with the body of a giant "informs" on his hunted pal, Frankie McPhillip, for a price. Frankie, refusing to be taken alive, is killed.

With 20 pounds in his pocket and his treachery on his conscience, Gypo becomes alternately tortured with fear, crazed by remorse, and exalted to drunken delusions of grandeur produced by his ill-gotten "wealth." And all of the time the net of his doom closes about him.

All of the story transpires in one action-packed night, giving the drama a cohesion all too seldom attained. Suspense builds swiftly as Gypo blunders through the fog shrouded night, mounting to a terrific climax.

Comedy relief highlights the stark drama of the story, and romance between Preston Foster and Heather Angel affords strong contrast to the attraction between McLaglen and Miss Grahame.

Shriners Hospital For Cripple Children

If you are a crippled child under fourteen years of age, unable to pay for operations, doctors, and other expenses which are connected with a long stay in a hospital, the best thing you can possibly do is get into the Shriners' hospital nearest you.

A long stay in one of these hospitals is not dreary or lonesome. There is an entertainment of some kind nearly every week, clowns, jugglers, string bands or magicians. Five days of the week there is school and handwork. If you are in bed the teachers simply come to your bed. In the morning there is school in the large airy school room for patients who are who are able to go there on crutches or in wheel chairs. In the afternoon the teacher comes to the ward and has class for the bed patients.

There is a Boy Scout troop and a Girl Scout troop. The Boy Scouts meet every Tuesday, the Girl Scouts every Wednesday. The Boy Scout troop was honored by a visit from Dan Beard, the National Scout commissioner.

The children are given the best of care by the doctors and nurses. Many children who had to be carried in, walked out. There was one little boy seven years old who walked for the first time.

At the rear of the hospital there is a fine playground with see-saws, a merry-go-round, and swings.

There are four wards, Big Boys' Ward, Big Girls', Infants, and the Admitting Ward.

I've been here over a year and I still like it. I shall always be indebted to Mr. Wills for sending me here.—Robert Adams.

IT IS BAD FORM

Grover Hall's failure to supplement his denunciation of the undemocratic two-thirds rule at Democratic national conventions with a few words against the equally undemocratic apportionment system at such conventions may have an explanation after all. We had been overlooking the fact that Grover's home is in the Black Belt and that "reapportionment" is a word which just simply isn't used in that storied section of Alabama. It's bad form.—John Temple Graves in The Age-Herald.

A hill billy wonders how it makes a native son of Haleburg, Henry County, feel to be classed by Mr. Graves as coming from the Black Belt. Wiregrass is the word down there, we thought.

tional unions affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The resolution, the last of more than 100 to be presented to the convention, asks the various internationals to sponsor and lend their best efforts toward a program placing a 5-cent per capita tax on all members of unions, funds so derived, if approved, to be used exclusively for educational and organization purposes.

A statewide organization campaign in charge of a sufficient staff of trained and experienced men, also would be assured under provisions of the resolution.

Serving notice that it was in no mood for compromise in the matter of better working conditions and general pay increases, the convention placed industry's choice between what it termtd as organized labor, on the one hand, and organized communism on the other.

Unicameral, or a one-house legislature, a 40-hour working week for women, adjustment of WPA differentials in the South, and all pro-Roosevelt candidates were endorsed.

The convention laughed off the floor a resolution calling for a farmer-labor party.

In an informal statement just before final adjournment of the convention, Mr. Mitch declared:

"I am appreciative of the honor bestowed upon me by members of organized labor in Alabama, and I seek the unselfish support of every trade unionist in what we hope will be a united effort to build a bigger and better Alabama State Federation of Labor."

Hunting Accidents On The Decline

Montgomery, Ala.—Only 15 hunting accidents marred the 1935-36 hunting season in Alabama. Nine of those, however, proved fatal to the victims.

Neverthless, this record is remarkable when it is compared with those of 1933-36 and 1934-35 and it it taken into consideration that there were probably as many as 200 guns in the field at one time or another during the season.

The 1933-34 hunting season produced 31 hunting accidents, of which 17 were fatal. The following year, 1934-35, saw a drop to 23 accidents and 13 fatalities.

This steady decline has been due, in part, to a vigorous campaign by sportsmen's clubs and the state conservation department against carelessness in the handling of firearms.

The last accident reported to the department during the 1935-36 season was the wounding of Jim Williams while he was hunting turkeys on the Bull Pen preserve near Sunflower early in April. Details of how the accident occurred were lacking, but Williams was said to have suffered the loss of one eye as a result.

With 21 counties either completely or partially organized, Thomas A. Ford, director of County conservation planning for the state conservation department, embarked this week on a tour that will take him into nine additional counties during the next 10 days.

In each of these counties Ford, assisted by sportsmen and others interested in preserving natural renewable resources, will set up a county conservation council. These councils, when a majority of the 67 counties of the state have organized them, will form a state wildlife federation which will in turn become affiliated with a national wildlife federation.

Ford's itinerary follows:

Alexander City, Tallapoosa County, May 8; Wetumpka, Elmore County, May 11; Prattville, Autauga County, May 13; Clanton, Chilton County, May 14 and Greensboro, Hale County, May 15.

New officers of the student organizations at Alabama College were installed at the annual ceremony in Palmer Hall Wednesday evening of last week.

The introductory remarks and charge to the president-elect of the Student Government Association were given by Miss Isabel Henderson, Mobile, retiring student body president, to Miss Sarah Kyser, Selma, her successor. U. S. Civil Service Board Warns Public

Washington, D. C.—The United States Civil Service Commission has sent a notice to post offices, warning that misleading information is being given the public by representatives of some of the correspondence schools which sell "civil service" courses.

For a long time the commission has been receiving complaints from different parts of the country that indicate that opportunities for obtaining federal employment have been greatly exaggerated.

It was made clear that no school has any connection whatever with the Civil Service Commission or with any other branch of the government, and also that the commission has no agents who solicit applications for civil service positions or who sell "civil service" courses.

No school can "guarantee" government employment and none is given information regarding examinations, or any other information, which is not available to the general public. The commission stated that it does not recommend any school, and explained that it is not necessary for anyone to take a course with a so-called civil service school in order to compete in a civil service examination.

A special point was made of the fact that information concerning examinations may be obtained at any time, without cost from the secretary of the civil service board at any first or second class post office or from the Commission's office in Washington, D. C.,

THIS WAS QUICK ACTION ON FIRE INSURANCE

Mr. W. C. Weems, local agent for the St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Company, is justifiably proud of a recent record set by his company in settling a claim for one of his clients. Mr. Weems submits the following facts in this interesting and speedy transaction:

"On March 9, 1936, Mr. S. P. Harrell, living on the road between Montevallo and Boothton, bought fire and tornado insurance from the St. Paul Fire and Marine Insurance Co., through W. C. Weems of Montevallo. On April 18, 1936, the dwelling of Mr. Harrell was destroyed by fire. On May 1, 1936, a check for 100 per cent of the insurance on the house was handed to Mr. Harrell."

We agree with Mr. Weems that this is really "quick action," and we congratulate Mr. Harrell upon the good judgment he used in placing insurance on his property. Every property owner should carry a reasonable amount of insurance.

Green Asks Workers To Support President

Washington, May 5 — William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, today advocated President Roosevelt's reelection.

"We have been inspired and thrilled by the leadership destiny has given us," Green told the National Women's Trade Union League convention.

"We want to continue it."

He later told reporters this endorsement of Mr. Roosevelt's candidacy was his own—that he could not speak for the Federation.

Only a week ago Green urged all A. F. of L. unions to adhere to the Federation's traditional non-partisan political policy.

"The training and experience of labor and the lessons which it has learned," he said in a letter to all unions at that time, "all lead to the conclusion that the highest and the best interests of labor will be served through a strict adherence to the traditional non partisan political policy of the American Federation of Labor."

THE NATIONAL SAFETY COUNCIL ITS POLICIES AND PROGRAMS

Address by Mr. Lucien Giddens on Convocation Program at Alabama College Tuesday

A congress, such as that of the National Safety Council, has been called more than a purposeful assembly. It has been called a spectacular demonstration of faith, a determination to swim and not to sink. The work over recent years has shown clearly that care, even with its possible retarding of speed, does not hinder progress and does not hinder opportunity for business and pleasure.

The safety movement goes back to 1891, when the head of the South Metropolitan Gas Company, London, made the first recognized move in organized accident prevention by adopting the jury system of investigating the cause of every accident, and of determining the best methods of prevention.

From that date the movement has developed rapidly until this significant week in safety. The United States now leads in associations, corporations and individuals supporting the safety movement. In Great Britain the National Safety First Association is the main force in this work. It was organized during the war when accidents increased on the streets in a startling way when they were darkened during air raids.

Now the United States, England and Canada have well-supported, nationally recognized safety organizations. Australia, South Africa and India have joined in the work to some extent, however; and associations have been formed in France, Belgium, Holland and Germany.

New Jersey set as a goal, a 35 per cent reduction in motor vehicle accidents. Consider the worth of a safety program as significant as that, in preventing death and injury!

The reasonableness, the wisdom, the valuable restraint associated with this safety program makes its appeal a direct one and to all alike. For all are subject to at least a degree of danger from accident no matter how secluded is the abode of some. And further, the safety program can teach nearly everyone something about being careful; about dangers that we may otherwise fail to see and to take precaution against.

Is it not surprising to know that fatal domestic accidents are second only to those of automobiles? The hazards in the homes have increased with the development of domestic conveniences; and as in automobile traffic the training of the user of the machine hasn't kept pace with the speed it maintains. For instance, the radio has increased the danger. The antenna is a great hazard. It should be grounded, preferably to a water pipe, and the wire leading in should be encased in porcelain or rubber.

I was surprised to read the number of people killed annually by leaning against weak windows, by falling pictures, by breaking ladders, by faulty stairs. It is said that one of the hardest falls is from the lowest step to the floor, and that the remedy is better lighting of stairways.

The kitchen is the most dangerous room in the house. And, while I was always afraid to light a gas oven, I was somewhat astonished to find the number of ways one can be injured in the kitchen, and generally it seems that the danger comes from not being afraid of such things as gas ovens. Most disastrous fires start in the kitchen and most fatal falls are in the bedroom.

One danger about which we've heard a great deal recently is carbon monoxide gas which cannot be seen or smelled. To avoid its treachery garage doors should be opened before the motor is started. Now, as to precautions in the home in addition to care and the ability to recognize danger, the first aid kit and skill at artificial respiration are often needed, the latter to be applied in any cases of suspended breathing.

I recently read with particular interest of the correct conduct in discovering fire at night. If there seems to be smoke in the room, the door should be opened cautiously after touching it to see if it is hot. One should crawl through instead of running through it, because there is cooler, clearer air near the flooor.

One-fourth of all fatal fire accidents are at home, where "unloaded" guns take a heay toll. As you know, many holidays are blighted by such accidents as Christmas tree and fire works burns. It is recommended by the council that such fireworks displays be handled by experts for entire communities. As an example of the very detailed and minute instruction given by the safety program, one suggestion made for care in the home was in picking up heavy objects to bend the knees and keep the back straight to avoid strain. This illustration shows just how carefully the problem of preventing death and injury has been studied.

The danger of traffic is increased apparently by the general impression that anyone can drive just as anyone could drive a horse and buggy, and the further impression that specific training or talent is unnecessary. Many motor accidents are due to lack of knowledge rather than to incompetence.

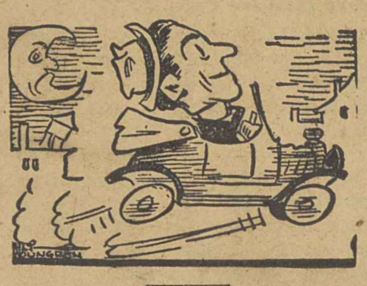
While man in his reckless haste is often more responsible for accidents than the machine he handles, still the mechanical factor is important and automobiles should be tested regularly.

One estimate has indicated that more than 85 per cent of vehicle accidents are due to human fault. This would indicate that the cars we drive have been improved to stand up under the greater speed which they make today, but that the improvement of driving skill has not been corresponding. Instruction, examination of drivers, safety of machines and safety of highways combined can accomplish a great deal in reducing highway accidents.

The Workman's Compensation Acts, making obligation to compensate independent of negligence on part of employers or fellow-servants, generally cannot be excluded even by express agreement. They have been adopted fairly widely and they make employers insurors of their servants against accidental injuries and death. But this and other forms of insurance are poor substitutes for proper action in time to seek prevention rather than cure for the troubles resulting from carelessness. It is apparent that many of the accidents of the kind to which I have referred can be eliminated, but it requires a demand of the citizens for such care after the safety organization through such programs places the facts in full view.

Today's Safe Driving Hint

(By National Safety Council)



Driving in "Deserted" Areas

One of the greatest mistakes a driver can make is to get the idea that he can safely speed on city streets in the wee small hours when streets are apparently deserted.

The same principle holds true during the day in sparsely traveled residential districts. You approach an intersection and if you know there is little travel on the cross street, you are tempted to go through it without diminishing your speed and the fact that you can do this repeatedly without mishap increases your confidence. But some day another car will be coming along that cross street and you will be unable to stop in time to avoid a smashup.

When danger seems most remote — beware!

Jarman Thanks Voters For Victory

In a letter to The Times, Pete B. Jarman, Jr., the next Congressman from the Sixth District, expresses his thanks and appreciation to the people of Shelby County for the splendid support they gave him in the Democratic Primary May 5. His letter is reproduced below:

Greetings and appreciative best wishes to my third best county and particularly to the people of Montevallo, one of my very best beats.

I hasten to thank every single person in Shelby for my magnificent vote in your great county. Naturally happy indeed over our decisive victory, which was a complete rout outside of Tuscaloosa, I particularly appreciate the outstanding contribution toward it by my friends in Shelby.

This overwhelming endorsement, the largest with which a candidate for congress was ever favored in our district, simply strengthens my determination to prove worthy of the honor you have so generously conferred upon me by becoming a congressman of whom you will be proud. I bespeak the wholehearted cooperation of the entire citizenship of Shelby toward that end.

Now indulging in a long overdue rest, I anticipate with pleasure the hope of seeing each of you and thanking you personally before very long. I am sure you will share my pride in the knowledge that the friendship of 91.94 per cent of you contributed toward me in this important post of service. This causes Shelby to be my third best county by only 1.25 per cent under my banner county and .43 per cent under my home county of Sumpter. Montevallo was much better than the county as a whole, giving me 97.31 per ct. of the votes cast. I thank you again most sincerely from the bottom of a very appreciative heart, and look forward with pleasurable anticipation to our long and cooperative service for the finest people and the best district in the United States.
—Pete B. Jarman, Jr.

COUNT ON ME TO PREVENT ACCIDENTS

MONTEVALLO
SAFETY PLEDGE

With this emblem and pledge placed upon practically every automobile in Montevallo, the Business and Professional Women's Club has brought to this community a renewed and broader spirit of Safety. Every interest and institution in the community has heartily responded to the invitation of the Women's Club for cooperation in the movement through this week.

Some Reasons for Promoting A Safety Campaign In Montevallo

An address by Mrs. Charlotte Peterson, on the Alabama College Radio Program, WAPI, Birmingham, on last Sunday Afternoon

During the coming week, beginning May 11, and continuing until Monday next, May 18, the city of Montevallo will experience its first safety campaign. There has long been need for such community effort. The sponsors of this campaign are the members of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Montevallo. As one of the teachers in the Elementary School, I am reminded many times every day that there are many hazards to life in the going to and from place to place in our small town. A hasty judgment might lead one to say that the automobile is responsible for this lack of safety; but such a statement is not founded on fact. Many conditions and things as well as the automobile contribute to accidents on the road. Many of these accidents would not occur if we had some plan for promoting safety. I am thinking particularly of the safety of school children in this community. I believe that we could remove almost all risk by practicing certain things.

1. We need a speed limit in Montevallo. We need to be sure at all times that all cars are under control in the city. If we had such an ordinance there would be no cars racing into town from Aldrich not thinking at all of the dangerous intersection at the Methodist Church corner. We would no longer have reckless driving on the Shelby road between the bridge nad the post office if we had traffic laws.

2. After having a speed limit for our traffic we need to have the speed law enforced. It is a travesty on our city government that frequently a speed law is a law in name only. We need to have consistent enforcement of law and in a short time the habit of respecting traffic ordinances will become a routine in driving. There will be less and less traffic offenses. The secret of good traffic regulations is in adequate and fair traffic law enforcement. We do not have this at present in Montevallo.

3. Another need in our community is for traffic regulation which will provide certain recreation areas for children who wish to skate. At present the children take their lives in their own hands when they skate. If we could rope off short tracks on streets travelled little at certain times of day for the children to skate, the danger of accidents due to skating over town would be almost eliminated.

4. We need to educate all people who use bicycles to the uses and abuses of bicycle riding in traffic. Many accidenes are caused by bicyclists themselves who falsely feel that they are laws unto themselves, and who disregard automobile traffic entirely. Children riding bicycles should know traffic laws, signaling, their place on the highways, and they should have some sense of time, distance and speed. One safety precaution would be to rule against bicycle riding at night.

5. "Stop" signs at intersections are needed where traffic is heavy There should be "Slow" signs adjacent to school areas. It is expecting too much of pedestrians and school children to keep continually on the lookout for approaching cars at high speed from all directions. Children and pedestrians alike should feel the protection of thee law that "Stop" signs at intersections are designed to give. Children going to and from school should traverse areas marked for safety by "Stop" and "Slow" signs. Motorists likewise should be warned of the need to proceed cautiously in school areas because of these same signs.

6. Bounding out into thoroughfares and highways from drives. alleys, and side streets is dangerous to all. There should be certain practices for this kind of manipulation that should be strictly adhered to for the safety of everyone.

7. Turning in the middle of the street should not be tolerated. Street lengths are short. The dangers incident to turning in the street are much greater than the benefits that motivate this time-saving practice.

All the citizens of Montevallo should at all times and in all places promote and respect traffic ordinances and help in the prosecution of traffic laws designed to increase the safety of all.

Event Day Draws Big Crowd

The second big event day in Montevallo's Trade Building campaign last Saturday brought a great throng of people to town, and business was considerably stimulated, according to the statements made by a number of the merchants.

When the time for making the awards arrived, the main street for a block was so crowded with anxious spectators that traffic was blocked entirely for about an hour.

Mr. W. J. Kennerly acted as announcer for the awards, and a mighty good job he did of it too. In fact, he was so good that every prize was grabbed by someone right on the spot.

Howard Frederick, of Ashby, was the fortunate winner of the $100 cash award as first prize. The second prize of $10 in cash was awarded to Walter Blankenship.

Winners of the other cash awards of $5 each were Q. B. Lee, of Maylene, Maud Tatum, of Wilton and Seale Staples.

The next big event day will be Saturday May 23 when a total of $75 in cash will be awarded to somebody who trades in Montevallo between now and that time.

Come to Montevallo any day, every day, to do your buying. Ask your merchants for your trade tickets. Then come back on Saturday, May 23, and be on hand when the big event takes place.

Women's Club Is Sponsoring Event

Alabama College Cooperates in Campaign Convocation Program of Student Senate Presents "Safety" to Students

The Student Senate sponsored this week's convocation program which was given over to "Safety," in cooperation with the program of the Business and Professional Women's Club. Dorothy Davis, president of the Senate, presided. She indicated the desire of the Senate to participate in movements that were designed to make better citizens and better communities. She indicated also some of the needs which college students observed as being present in traffic routine of Montevallo at present; and concurred with others that "stop" and "slow" signs would pave the way to safety for a great many of us. She also thought that the children of the community might be very appreciative of a little protected space for recreation, such as skating.

Lena Baldwin spoke in her individual and effective way on "Safety on the Campus." Her point was that those on the campus are protected from almost all risk by well developed rules and regulations, designed to make the campus safe, and to give the parents of girls in college a feeling of security for the physical welfare of their daughters. What hazards the college students face grow out of their indifference to the need for cooperation in practicing the rules. This is a serious thing. Students often overlook the fact that rules are for safety and not for punishment. When students appreciate the need for cooperating with student government in keeping house rules concerning irons, cigarettes, lamps, candles and the like, then the campus will be almost without any fire risks.

One thing that Miss Baldwin spoke of was the well developed parking and traffic regulations which Dr. Harman has developed during the present year. It makes riding on the campus on narrow winding roads so much easier than formerly. The only thing that breaks in on the perfection of this plan is a few stray cars that find the wrong parking places, or choose curves or other ill advised places for parking. Here we see again the need for cooperation.

Student senate carried over the program in a very commendable way. Mr. Giddens concluded the program by discussing the National Safety Council, its policies and accomplishments. This was as usual a treat for all listeners who appreciate both the fact and finish of Mr. Giddens' talk.

Safety Director To Speak Tonight

CITIZENS SAFETY MEETING WILL BE HELD AT THE BAPTIST CHURCH

The state director of public safety will speak this evening in the Baptist Church. We are very fortunate to have Mr. Tipton speak to us, and particularly at this time. He knows all the communities of Alabama, and what are the safety precautions that every community should take, as well as the particular needs of each community. He also knows the state program for public safety, and has working with him a large staff of state highway patrol officers. He will be in a position to tell us what the state is doing to educate motorists and others alike to the practices that insure safety. The Boy Scouts will participate in this program Everyone is invited. It is hoped that the community will be well represented in this meeting.

Education Meeting Begins June 11

LARGE ATTENDANCE TO BE AT ALABAMA COLLEGE JUNE 11 TO JULY 22

Advance indications are that the Progressive Education Demonstration Schools, conducted on both the high and elementary school levels, will draw a large attendance during its session, June 11 to July 22, at Alabama College. In addition, the Regional Conference of the Progressive Education Association which will be held on the campus July 1 to 3, is proving of wide interest.

The summer program of progressive education at the college coincides with the first term of summer school, the second term of the summer school being scheduled July 23- August 26. The progressive education work at Alabama College has drawn a large attendance from neighboring states as well as from Alabama. Approximately three thousand teachers, supervisors, superintendents, and other school workers have observed the work and have joined in the conferences, while several hundred have been in regular attendance during the term of the school.

The elementary and high schools will demonstrate the practical applications of progressive education principles and theory. There will be college credit courses in progressive education and seminars in elementary and secondary education conducted by specialists who will visit the campus at intervals during the session. There will be five periods of observation, conference and study of progressive education for the benefit of administrators, supervisors and teachers who cannot attend the full term.

The entire program is under the direction of Dr. Alice V. Keliher, chairman of the Commission of Human Relations of the Progressive Education Association. Special lecturers include Dr. H. Gordon Hullfish, Dr. Genevieve M. Leary, Dr. V. T. Thayer, and Dr. Laura Zirbes. The faculty for the summer school, of which Dean T. H. Napier is director, includes more than fifty members, some of whom will devote their attention exclusively to progressive work.

The College is cooperating with the State Department in its elementary and high school curriculum revision program and is offering three curriculum courses in cooperating with the progressive education program. They are:

"Orientation in Curriculum Making," "Techniqques of Curriculum Making," and Laboratory in Curriculum Making."

Mrs. J. C. Anderson To Speak At College

Mrs. John C. Anderson, Montgomery, will deliver the Vesper Service Address at Alabama College Sunday, May 31, according to announcement of President A. F. Harman.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees will be held on the afternoon of May 29, followed by the President's reception for the governor and the graduating class that evening. The Class Day exercises are announced for Saturday afternoon, May 30.

As previously announced, Dr. James B. Green, of the Presbyterian Theological Seminary will give the Commencement sermon at 11 on the morning of May 31; and Judge Joseph Winston Cox, of the District of Columbia Supreme Court, will deliver the Baccalaureate Address the following morning at 10.

May 31st Dead Line For Crop Applicat'ns

The Emergency Crop and Feed Loan Office of Memphis, Tennessee, has notified the county agent, A. A. Lauderdale, that May 31st, 1936, has been set as the closing date for accepting applications for 1936 crop and feed loans in Shelby County. Therefore, all application must be made during the month of May. Blank forms are obtainable at the County Agent's Office.

News Review of Current Events the World Over

Mussolini Says Conquered Ethiopia Will Be Italian Colony—House Battles Over New Relief Bill—Some Campaign Developments.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

© Western Newspaper Union.

Benito Mussolini

ETHIOPIA is conquered, Emperor Haile Selassie has fled to Palestine aboard a British cruiser, and the Italian army is in possession of Addis Ababa. The war in East Africa is ended. But this climax may be only the beginning of a still greater story, for Benito Mussolini tells the world that all of Ethiopia now belongs to Italy, to be treated as a colony and defended by force of arms if necessary. He toned this down just a little by giving the French ambassador assurance that he would not infringe on French and British interests in East Africa, meaning the French railway from Djibouti to Addis Ababa and the British interests in the Lake Tana headwaters of the Blue Nile. Il Duce intimated that if France and Britain would support his program he would give them full trade privileges in Ethiopia and exclude all other nations.

The League of Nations council was about to meet in Geneva and it was believed the anti-Fascist sentiment among the French left parties that have just come into power would influence the French attitude there. The British, too, were said not to be reconciled to Mussolini's victory and it was understood Foreign Secretary Eden would insist on continuance of the penalties against Italy, provided the other leading nations agreed. Indeed, the league could not well raise the sanctions if the European powers take the stand assumed last fall by the United States and refuse to recognize acquisition of territory by force. All of them realize such recognition in this case would create a dangerous precedent.

Mussolini's success in East Africa is a humiliating defeat for Great Britain, and a sad blow to the prestige of the League of Nations. Anthony Eden told the house of commons that Britain's failure to take military sanctions against Italy was "due to the horror of war and not to fear of the ultimate outcome." The Laborites enraged Eden by their attacks and he refused to disclose what the government's policy at Geneva might be, demanding a free hand to deal with circumstances as they might arise.

One result in Washington of the taking of Addis Ababa was severe criticism of the State department for having so wretchedly protected a legation there.

Haile Selassie

EMPEROR HAILE SELASSIE of Ethiopia gave up the hopeless fight against the Italian invaders and fled from Addis Ababa with his family. Mussolini's victorious troops soon after marched into the capital, the first to enter being a picked regiment representing all units of the Italian army, the Askari, infantry, artillery, air force, engineers, grenadiers, bersaglieri, Alpini, cavalry, marines and Fascist militia men.

Their coming was welcomed by the foreigners who remained in the city, for as soon as the negus left, the natives began to pillage, plunder and burn. The business center of the town was speedily wrecked and the government buildings were stormed and ravaged, these including the treasury from which the state's store of gold was stolen, and the armory. The streets were strewn with corpses and the Ethiopians, crazed by liquor, rushed about shooting at random and gathering up their loot to carry it to the hills.

Only one American was reported killed. That was Mrs. N. A. Stadin, American wife of an Adventist missionary, who was struck by a stray bullet. Nearly all other foreigners were gathered in the well fortified British legation, but American Minister Cornelius Van H. Eggert with his wife and the male members of the staff remained in the American compound. They were armed only with rifles and pistols and were under orders from Secretary of State Hull not to risk their lives uselessly; but they were determined to hold the legation and radio station as long as possible.

After repulsing many attacks, this plucky group finally evacuated the legation.

WITH the introduction of the unemployment relief bill calling for appropriation of a billion and a half dollars, a lively fight started in the house. The Republicans and a fair sized bloc of Democrats attacked the measure chiefly because the entire big sum was to be turned over to Harry Hopkins, WPA administrator, in accordance with the wishes of President Roosevelt. The Chief Executive had refused to countenance the earmarking of $400,000,000 for projects of the heavy type sponsored by Secretary Ickes, head of the Public Works administration, and so the adherents of the latter gentleman were prepared to revive the old Ickes-Hopkins feud. Majority Leader Bankhead was confident the bill would be passed as reported by the appropriations committee.

At a Republican caucus Representative John Taber of New York, ranking minority member of the appropriations committee, explained the measure to his colleagues so that they could conduct an "intelligent opposition" to it. He promised a real fight on the bill. When Hopkins was before the committee in secret session, he was ordered to give detailed information concerning his expenditure of the four billions deeded him by congress last year. Hopkins reluctantly admitted that nearly two billions of the original huge fund was still unexpended.

Added to the extra one and a half billions requested by President Roosevelt, Hopkins would have three and a half billions to spend in an election year, it was pointed out.

Alf Landon

CALIFORNIA'S Presidential Republican preference primary, eagerly awaited by the whole country resulted in the defeat of the Landon slate of delegates that was put forward by William R. Hearst and Governor Merriam, with Landon's tacit consent. The winning delegates, backed by Herbert Hoover and nominally pledged to Earl Warren though uninstructed, carried the state by a majority of about 90,000. Mr. Warren announced at once that he released them from their pledge, to vote as they see fit in the convention.

This looked like a blow to Governor Landon, and to a certain extent it was; but his managers claim at least 18 of the delegates will go over to the Kansan on an early ballot. Moreover, many friends of Landon deprecated the fact that Hearst was supporting him, believing it would do him more harm than good; and they were glad to see him freed in part from what they consider an incubus.

Democrats voted almost solidly for Mr. Roosevelt. Upton ("Epic") Sinclair's ticket received something over 100,000 votes, and that of John S. McGroarty, Townsend plan supporter, about half as many.

In South Dakota a slate of uninstructed delegates favoring Landon won over a ticket pledged to Senator Borah, though the margin was slender.

Senator Vandenberg

SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG of Michigan has asked Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald of that state to present his name to the Republican convention in Cleveland for the Presidential nomination, but the senator insists this does not make him an active candidate.

"The Michigan state convention generously instructed the Michigan delegation in Cleveland to present my name," the senator said. "But the delegation is unpledged—at my request. It is free to vote as it pleases. I have not sought a delegation here or elsewhere and I shall not do so. I have not sought the nomination and shall not do so. My situation is not changed in the slightest."

Friends of Senator Borah in Utah tried unsuccessfully for a Borah pledged delegation from that state. The Republican state convention in Ogden voted to send an uninstructed group to Cleveland, following the recommendation of the resolutions committee.

The Arkansas delegation also will be uninstructed, though the state convention approved an "expression of good will" toward Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas.

Col. Henry Breckenridge, who offered himself to the Democrats as a Presidential nominee aspirant merely so that disaffected members of the party might have some place to go, received about one-seventh of the votes in the Maryland preference primary. The rest, of course, went to Mr. Roosevelt. Colonel Breckenridge had made no campaign.

Sec'y Hull

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL has successfully negotiated another reciprocal trade agreement. It is with France and was signed at the State department by Mr. Hull and Andre de Laboulaye, the French ambassador. It will become effective on June 15, and the details of the pact were not immediately made public. It is believed the terms include duty concessions by the United States on French wines, cigarette papers, and luxuries such as laces and cosmetics, and by France on American exports of agricultural and industrial products. The agreement is also understood to contain increases in French quotas on American exports of fruits, and possibly other products.

An announcement by the State department said:

"The agreement with France is the first comprehensive arrangement for regulating commercial relations with that country in many years. It will provide improved opportunities for the expansion of trade in products of special interest to each country, and will enable the commercial interests concerned to develop these opportunities without fear of the sudden and unforeseen changes to which they are exposed in the absence of such an agreement.

"In addition to duty concessions and quota increases by France and duty concessions by the United States on carefully selected lists of products, the agreement provides in general for substantial most-favored-nation treatment by each country of the commerce of the other."

THE national resources committee, which is headed by Secretary of the Interior Ickes, has submitted for the approval of President Roosevelt a plan for the creation of a Pacific Northwest Power agency that would outrival the Tennessee Valley authority and would produce almost as much electric energy as the entire nation could utilize.

Two of the New Deal's power ventures, the Bonneville and Grand Coulee dams, would be embraced by the PNPA. The ultimate cost of Bonneville will be 75 million dollars and that of Grand Coulee 204 millions. The additional dam and power plant projects proposed by the committee would entail expenditures of approximately 526 millions, making a total of 805 millions.

Sen. Hastings

DANIEL O. HASTINGS, senator from Delaware, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee and outspoken opponent of the New Deal, will not seek reelection when his present term expires. He so announced in a letter to the party leaders of his state, giving as his reason the necessity to devote himself to his law practice. This may have influenced his decision, but it is more than suspected that the real reason was the fact that the du Pont family, all-powerful in Delaware Republican politics, had decided that the senatorial seat should go to Gov. C. Douglas Buck, who is related to the du Ponts by marriage. Senator Hastings has always been ready and eloquent in defense of the du Ponts against attacks by the New Dealers.

HENRY P. FLETCHER, Republican national chairman, has taken a leaf from the plans of the Democrats and announces that the men nominated at the Cleveland convention to head the Republican ticket will be notified of the fact at a grand outdoor ceremony in the Municipal stadium, near the convention hall, immediately after the adjournment. This plan, of course, is conditional upon the wishes of the nominees. The Democrats had previously announced plans to notify President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner of their re-nomination with a ceremony at Franklin field, Philadelphia.

MINERS and operators in the Pennsylvania anthracite fields have agreed upon the continuance of existing wage levels for two years, though final details of the contract are still being worked out.

Other points decided upon, it was said, are a complete checkoff of union dues, a form of equalization of working time in idle collieries and a seven-hour day during the second year of the contract. The miners now work an eight-hour, six-day week and had been seeking a six-hour, five day week.

SOME one with a peculiar idea of humor played a mean joke on the authorities in Washington. The red flag of Communist Russia with the hammer and sickle was discovered at dawn flying from the flagstaff atop the marble building of the Supreme court of the United States. It was so skillfully fastened up there that policemen and firemen worked an hour and a half before the revolutionary emblem could be removed.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Start Class Struggle

Washington.—Business, as represented by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, again has clashed with the New Deal, and again the cannonading by business added nothing. Its attacks apparently bothered the New Deal not at all, for the New Deal has proceeded after the manner of the mastiff trotting along without concern while a poodle barked and snarled.

Business made no overtures for compromise with the New Deal and New Deal spokesmen were not hastening to make peace with business leaders. Altogether, there was not the slightest indication given that there will ever be peace between the two elements of economic thought.

The one thing that impressed me about the recent annual meeting here of the chamber of commerce was the solidarity of business in its opposition to general New Deal principles. That was to be expected but it has not always been the case. In days past, there were many business groups and individuals who adhered to the New Deal and vainly tried to work out an understanding with the administration. At this annual meeting, however, there was not the slightest effort made on the part of business to accomplish any arrangement whereby business and the administration would work together.

This can mean only one thing: President Roosevelt is going into his campaign for re-election without the support of business interests except where, in particular lines, benefit has accrued incidentally to specific businesses.

One would think that such a condition would constitute a threat against the President's re-election. Such appears not to be the case, however, because of the particular type of campaign which Mr. Roosevelt and his political commander in chief, Postmaster General Farley, are making. The President's recent political speeches have made it quite clear that he is seeking support wholly from the agricultural and labor segments of our voters. His appeals are quite open and frank and they are drawing considerable criticism because it is held they constitute the initiation of class struggle in this country. Whatever the reason for the President's course, it remains as a fact that he is very busy cultivating voters who have suffered most in the depression.

Makes Good Fight

When I reported above that business came off second best in its fresh assault on the New Deal, I did not mean to imply that it had not made a vigorous fight. It probably gained some ground in getting before the country its side of the story, a phase of our national situation which has not been as fully advertised to the country as have the activities and accomplishments of the New Deal. The story of the losses suffered by business actually is not a great deal different from that of the individual, and many businesses are existing on a hand-to-mouth basis just as is the case with thousands of individuals. Because business, in our mind's eye, at least, is larger than an individual, political demagogues regard it as fair game and for that reason, I am inclined to believe, business has not had a fair chance on the part of most of us when considering national problems.

On the other hand, business has many units within the whole that have not played fair. There are a great many corporations that are guilty of plain oppression, even to the extent of fraud and corruption of business methods. For the crookedness of this segment, all business has been blamed by the New Deal. This is not equity. The unhappy part of it all is that unless all business stands together, good, bad and in-between, it can get nowhere at all in defense of its legitimate rights.

There is, therefore, a wholly natural and yet quite unfair result emanating from this condition. New Deal planners, in their efforts to catch the crooks, have punished legitimate business far too much if one is to accept even partially the public statements and the private expressions of the business men who attended the annual meeting of the chamber of commerce. This ought not to be and I think that legitimate business has just ground for complaint on this score.

So, as the situation now stands, I believe it can be said in all fairness that neither side in this battle between the New Deal and business comes into court with entirely clean hands. Business has its cancerous sores. The New Deal has its nitwits and theorists who know nothing about practical economics. The result of this is plainly seen, and it becomes more and more apparent that Mr. Roosevelt cannot accomplish his objective of complete recovery until he directs some of his subordinates to put their feet on the ground. Indeed, there are some of the New Deal subordinates who ought to be tossed bodily into the street, just as there are some business men who ought to be thrown into jail.

Business Has Answer

The chamber of commerce meeting brought forth the information that business, as a whole, had kept hundreds of thousands of workers on its collective pay rolls during the depression when conditions did not justify their retention. The claim was advanced that business had expended something like twenty billions in wages paid from stored-up reserves. It was further asserted that business was alone responsible for such gains toward recovery as have been made.

New Deal spokesmen, from President Roosevelt on down, have consistently accused business of failure to take on workers and help solve the unemployment problem. At the same time. The banking structure of the country has been accused chiefly by the President of refusal to extend credit to business, and business as a whole has been classified by the President as greedy.

It seems safe to say that as regards these charges, business does have an answer, for throughout all history capital has refused to work unless there was a reasonable promise of return. Now, in addition to the lack of that promised return, business is and was constantly confronted with uncertainties on the part of the New Deal. The present pending tax legislation is typical. The most dangerous provision of that legislation is that which will prevent business from building up reserves such as those upon which it has been drawing during the depression.

Delicate Question

With reference to the New Deal policies toward business, a statement by the Rural Electrification administration has just come to my desk. It touches on that very delicate question of how far the government can enter into business in competition with private enterprise without destroying or driving out private initiative. The complaint on the part of private business that the government is continually wedging its way into private fields is well known but the REA statement puts something of a new slant on the view.

The REA statement consists of a letter from REA Administrator Morris Cooke to the State Corporation Commission of Virginia. The Virginia commission was urged to consider the situation in which the REA and one of its loans will be placed in event of a certain ruling by the Virginia officials. In effect, Administrator Cooke asked the Virginia commission to rule against private business in order that a $366,000 loan made by REA to a co-operative organization in Virginia can be protected.

To review the facts briefly, let me explain that a private electric company applied to the Virginia commission for authority to extend its lines for transmission of energy into a farming section adjacent to cities served by the electric company. It happened that the REA had sent agents into this same territory and had obtained promises from many farmers to buy electricity from a co-operative concern to be organized and financed by REA. The private company apparently horned in to what Mr. Cooke thought was the territory of REA by right of discovery or some other such reason, and so he is now engaged in attempting at least to prevent the private company from entering that field.

The point of this circumstance is that here is a federal agency, steeped in bureaucracy and with the usual bureaucratic thirst for power, which actually is attempting to drive private industry out of its way. It is doing it under the thinly disguised reason of protecting a government loan.

I have heard considerable discussion of this case. Many observers and students of economic questions contend that the federal government has absolutely no right to engage in that sort of business. While it may be, and probably can be, said that the electric company was attempting to take the cream of the crop by extending its lines only to territory adjacent to its headquarters, the fact remains that the normal re-employment which that private company would do will be cut down proportionately by the extension of the federal activities into that area. It may appear that the workers displaced for the private company will be taken on by the federally financed co-operative lines but such is not the case. It is just one more indication of how government, once it enters private business, continues to expand and to destroy initiative which private enterprise has and which government never has been known to have.

Mussolini Goes Through Practical Selassie
Snake Killed One
Which End of the Gun?

Arthur Brisbane

Mussolini's men entered Addis Ababa, driving out the Ethiopian looters, bringing safety to various foreigners, including our own minister.

Rome went wild with joy; and no wonder.

In seven months Mussolini has conquered Ethiopia's millions, killing and wounding 250,000 of them, marching steadily ahead through dangerous valleys and high mountains, driving out the Ethiopian armies, that were directed by skilled soldiers from Turkey, Scandinavia and elsewhere.

Those impressed by the high qualities of Ethiopia's Arab slave-trading ruler will note that in the great crisis his presence of mind remained. The Associated Press says he took with him on the British boat "the imperial family jewels, many cases of gold bullion and gold coins." On his way from Addis Ababa to the British ship he stopped to take all the cash from the treasury and customs house at Diredawa.

In Florida, a well-meaning preacher, who thought it his duty to let rattlesnakes bite him to show the power of God, actually did let the snakes bite him without first removing their fangs. He is dead, the jury said, "by the bite of a rattlesnake through his own carelessness."

The poor fanatic succeeded only in proving the power of rattlesnake poison. The laws of the universe could hardly be suspended to justify the whim of one well-meaning fanatic.

It makes a difference, even to the No. 1 Public Enemy, "I'll-never-be-taken-alive" bandit, which way the gun is pointed. Mr. Karpis is taken, much alive, with no struggle, beyond holding a straw hat over his face to baffle photographers.

Much efficiency in cash rewards; Dillinger defied all the "G-men"; a reward was offered, and a red-haired lady delivered him to the "G-men" bullets, and got $5,000.

Whether the $7,000 reward offered for Karpis tempted some friend of that courageous one remains to be seen.

The criminal is in business for money, and when he can sell a friend for $5,000, that seems preferable to risking his own life. The reward system should be extended; $5,000 reward for evidence resulting in arrest and conviction of any murderer.

The Carnegie Institute announces a "new law of matter" having to do with the "cohesion of infinitesimal particles of matter within the atom."

If it were not for that law, according to scientists, "the universe would consist of nothing but light hydrogen gas." That should interest politicians, who, after the big conventions, will live, until November, in a universe consisting of something lighter than "light hydrogen gas."

England's new king, Edward the Eighth, is said to be engaged to marry the Princess Alexandrine Louise of Denmark, twenty-one years old, the English king's third cousin.

The uncle of the young lady says he and her father know nothing of it. Nevertheless, it is difficult to believe that King Edward will remain a bachelor, whether he marries this charming young princess or some other, possibly a good healthy young Scotch girl, if one available could be found.

Dr. Walter Emerson Briggs, who teaches dentistry in Tufts college, says "women can take any kind of pain without a whimper."

Women endure pain more courageously than men. Childbirth has taught them to suffer and endure in isolation. Man shows his heroism preferably in crowds, in squadrons, platoons; often he would not do that if it did not take more courage to stay behind alone than to go ahead with the others.

Two misguided Mexicans decided to ring bells of the ancient mission church at Juarez, Mexico, to celebrate the nomination of a National Revolutionary candidate for governor of Chihuahua. The pious ladies of Juarez thought those old bells should not be rung for any revolutionary candidate, and it became necessary for troops to rescue the bellringers from the infuriated women, giving a good imitation of Euripides man-hunting Bacchae.

When women start they mean it.

SYNOPSIS

The Duke, Barry Gilbert, a likable youth of twenty-three, jobless and broke, enters an unoccupied summer home in Southampton, seeking shelter from a storm. He makes himself at home. He is startled by the arrival of a butler, Willetts; and a chauffeur, Evans. He learns that the son of the owner of the house, Jack Ridder, whom the servants had never seen, is expected. He decides to bluff it out. His supposed parents have left for Germany. Next morning he opens a letter for his "mother," and finds a message from the real Jack, saying he could not come, and returning a hundred-dollar bill. The boy's father had pensioned him into obscurity. Barry pockets the money, intending to return it later. On the way to Montauk, where he intended to disappear, he meets Judge Hambidge and his daughter, Patricia. Believing he is Jack Ridder, she invites him to dinner the following Thursday. Barry returns to Southampton, deciding to stay a bit longer. Mr. Ridder, Sr., through his newspaper, the Globe, accuses Judge Hambidge of taking orders from Tammany Hall in a condemnation proceeding. Barry meets Peter Winslow, prominent attorney. Winslow tells Barry that Judge Hambidge had seen an accident in which a woman was killed by a taxicab. At home Barry finds the wife of the real Jack Ridder awaiting him. Her husband is in jail in New York, charged with the murder of Mike Kelly, Tammany boss. The girl, Peggy, tells Barry how she had met Jack in Florida and married him, as Jay Rogers. Jack lost his job, and they went to New York, where she got work at the Cocoanut Bar. There she was accused of trying to pick the pocket of Mike Kelly, and was arrested. Her husband went to Kelly's to induce him to drop the charge. Later Kelly was found dead, his skull crushed by a decanter. Barry suggests he can help as Jack Ridder, and Mrs. Rogers agrees. Judge Hambidge delivers a decision in the condemnation suit in which Kelly had been interested. Barry cables Mrs. Ridder for $2,000. Winslow takes Rogers' case. Barry gets a job on the Globe under his true name. The editor, Ernie Harwood, assigns him to cover the Kelly murder. Barry suspects the Filipino servant of Kelly.

"No holes in that alibi," Tim said, as they reached the sidewalk. "Straight shooter, she is. Ran a saloon when Mike married her. You certainly got wound up. What was all that about the latch key?"

"Bright and shiny, wasn't it?"

"Brand new. She told you that. So did I, when we were looking at Kelly's key-wallet."

"Yes," Barry admitted. "But there wasn't any new key in that wallet."

Tim Laugherty stopped short in Fifth avenue.

"You're right," he said.

"I've got the number," Barry went on, producing his envelope. "A 66152. Write that down. A plain, round head. Two of 'em. Where's the other? It never was in that wallet, because every hook's filled."

"Maybe he carried it loose in his pocket."

"Wherever he carried the key, where is it?"

"I don't know," Tim answered. "It wasn't on the body—that's sure."

By now, it was time for his dinner appointment with Peggy.

Still in high spirits, he walked around to her boarding house. Barry remembered Southampton with shame when he saw the Ridders' two shabby rooms. The boy lay in one of them; a bright youngster, five years old. "The doctor doesn't seem to know what the matter is," Peggy declared.

"I know," Barry said. "I'd be sick in this dump. Why don't you bring him out to the country?"

Peggy shook her head.

"I want to be near Jack," she repeated.

"Winslow says he's likely to be free in a week."

Dining comfortably in a nearby cafe, he told her everything that had happened since their parting; all the astonishing events of that day. And, with the recital, Peggy's spirits rose, too. When Barry mentioned his new job, she actually laughed.

"That's funny," she said. "You're doing what the old man's real son wouldn't do."

"I've two reasons," Barry explained. "In the first place it puts me in a splendid position to help Jack. In the second—well, the fact is that I'm nuts about a girl, and I want to make good on her account."

"What's her name?"

Patricia Hambidge. She lives at Southampton, and she and her father both knew the Ridders. They think I'm young Ridder, of course."

The next morning, Barry dropped in again on Pete Winslow. The lawyer had talked with Peggy's husband, and was persuaded of his innocence. They've got a prima facie case, though," he admitted. "The grand jury'll indict the boy, I'm afraid. We'll get him tried as quickly as possible, and there isn't the slightest chance of his conviction."

Peter leaned forward, his fingers intertwined between his knees.

"That was a shrewd question you asked that Filipino. Only I wish you'd asked it of me. He's prepared now. Never mind. When it comes to cross-examination—"

He rose, with the joy of battle in his eyes.

"But be careful about tipping our hand," he said. "Bring in Mrs. Rogers. I'd like to check up on her statement."

"Tomorrow?"

"Make it next week."

"He's a great lawyer," Ernie Harwood said, when Barry repeated as much of this conversation as it seemed wise to repeat. "And a wizard at cross-examination. I've seen him discredit one witness after another with mere monosyllables. Tell Winslow I may have a tip for him some day. It's nothing now. Just a phone call. But, if I ever find who it was—"

Barry devoted that evening to drafting a letter for the real Jack Ridder to copy and send to his mother. Something told him that whatever the boy wrote himself would be cold and resentful. That would make the old lady unhappy, and Barry didn't want her to be.

"I've got a job on father's paper," he wrote, with genuine pride. I've respected father's wish as to using his name—except at Southampton, of course. They had to know there. At The Globe, I'm on my own, and getting ahead. I'll be a credit to you yet, darling."

From that, he went into some detail as to his interest in the friend "locked up for murder he didn't commit," and the need of funds for his defense. Even to Jack Ridder, it was obvious that the letter had to be sent, so sent it was—in Jack Ridder's hand-writing—from the railway station post box at Southampton the following Friday. Barry arrived on an early afternoon train.

He had wired Evans to meet him, and found Willetts waiting in the front hall. There was no doubt now that the butler suspected something, and Barry, sure of what he suspected, faced him with a broad grin. "What's the matter with you, Willetts?"

"Matter, sir?"

"You've been acting queer ever since the night Mrs. Rogers spent here. I don't know what you heard that night?"

"Do you mean eavesdropping, sir?"

There was a pained surprise in the man's voice.

"Not me, sir. I've got my position to remember. I've been a butler with some of the best families."

"All right," Barry soothed him. "You think I'm back at the kind of behavior that alienated me from my father. Well, I'm not. That 'glittery lady' is the wife of a man I met in Florida . . ."

And, for the third time that week, Barry related his story.

"She's a brave little kid," he concluded, "and she's in trouble up to her neck. I'm going to stand by her. I've got a job on my father's newspaper — under an assumed name, because I want to win out on my own. I've cabled my mother for money, and everything I can get goes to that lady until her husband can win on his own. I'm going to be in town most of the time now, working my head off."

"Yes, sir."

"I've been a loafer most of my life—and this is the beginning of a new chapter."

"Thank you, sir," Willetts said. "I'm very pleased, sir. If you don't mind my saying so, very pleased."

There were three memos of telephone messages from Pat.

Looking at them, on the library table, Barry went on grinning. He called her immediately, and she asked where he'd been all week. When he told her, she seemed almost annoyed. "So you've deserted me for a chorus girl," she said.

Could Pat be jealous?

"How soon can you come over?" she inquired. "Marian's not here yet, and dinner'll be late, but I simply can't wait to hear your adventures in sleuthing."

As he dressed, Barry kept thinking of this conversation. Absurd that Patricia Hambidge could be worried by his attachment to the "glittering lady." "Willetts and Pat both oozing disapproval. Or do I merely imagine it?"

But Pat's disapproval, at least, was depressingly evident from the moment he saw her.

She met him at the door, looking lovelier than ever.

"The one girl in the world for me," Barry thought.

"Let's sit on the sun porch," Pat greeted him. "Father'll be down in a minute. Marian came over by ferry from New London. She's dressing. Fancy your being concerned with this Kelly murder. A true motion-picture hero. Go on; I want all the details."

And, as Barry related them, the girl's irritation began to show in her face. It wasn't fair, she said, to "drag poor old Peter into it." Just because they'd met in this house at dinner. Nor could she see why he wanted to go into his father's office under the name of Barry Gilbert. "Frankly, I'm disappointed in you," she concluded, and obviously meant it.

Before Barry could reply, the Judge appeared, looking tired and haggard. That changed the subject, and Patricia's voice, which had been a little strident, softened again. She was plainly disturbed about the old gentleman, and kept glancing at him anxiously. "Father's been ill all week," she said.

"You ought've called off this dinner."

"I wanted you to meet Marian. But I do hope she comes down soon. Father's got to get to bed early."

The Judge patted her hand.

"Nonsense!"

"The doctor warned you against late hours," Pat reminded him. "But you would go to that banquet last Friday."

"That wasn't late hours," the Judge argued. "We were all through before midnight."

"But then you went for a walk," Barry said.

He said it quite innocently, but he was startled at seeing Hambidge's hand close spasmodically over Patricia's.

"Who told you that?" the Judge asked.

"Mr. Winslow."

Hambidge relaxed again.

"So I did," he recollected "But only a couple of blocks."

"Near a couple of miles, wasn't it?"

Barry was still making conversation, but there was nothing casual in the Judge's "Why do you say that?"

"Mr. Winslow says you saw that taxi accident at Sixteenth street and Fifth avenue."

The Judge raised his eyes to Barry's, almost defiantly.

"The taxi accident I saw was in Times square," he declared. "I don't know where you got the idea that it was at Sixteenth street. I certainly didn't say that to Peter."

"What does it matter?" Pat asked. "Here we are, gossiping, when I'm supposed to be preparing you for a reunion."

"Well, It Was Bound to Come," Barry Thought.

"A what?"

"A reunion. With an old friend. That's the reason Marion was so anxious that I should have you here. I didn't know myself until half an hour ago. Marian Lorn. Do you remember? She knew you at Harvard."

Well, it was bound to come, Barry thought.

"Are you surprised? Marian wanted you to be—terribly."

"I am—terribly."

This was the pay-off. What would Patricia say?

Patricia was saying, "Well, you must be delighted, too. Marian was going to surprise all of us, and then she lost her nerve. 'Wouldn't it be too catastrophic,' she said, 'if he didn't remember me?' "

Miss Lorn was on her way down the stairs.

Barry braced himself.

"Come on, you!" Pat called. "Dinner's waiting, and so's Mr. Ridder."

Marian raced down the steps, and halted, looking at him across the balustrade.

"Mr. Ridder?"

Now for it!

"Well," she continued, "the joke's on me. I should never have known you."

"I'd've known you anywhere."

"Of course, you had to say that. But didn't your hair used to be dark?"

"Sure; I hennaed it."

"No foolin'! I thought you were slighter, too. But, of course, there was only that one evening."

Thank God for that!

"Don't tell me we met only once?"

"Don't you remember?"

"It doesn't seem possible that I let you slip through my fingers."

"Come on," Patricia urged. "Everything's getting cold."

Not Barry. He was warming up, and actually enjoying himself. It was amazing how his luck held!

A pretty girl, Marian; all fluff and gurgle. She and Barry had the table conversation pretty much to themselves. Patricia put in a word occasionally, but she was distressed about her father, and with reason, for the Judge seemed suddenly worn out. Exhilarated by this newest escape, Barry was almost brilliant. They were finishing their coffee, when Marian said, "Do you still play?"

"Bridge or golf?" he asked.

"Silly! The violin, of course! I hope you haven't been flattering yourself that it was you I remember. It wasn't. I didn't even know whether your hair was dark or fair, but I'll never forget the way you played the Liebestod."

"You never told me you played," Pat said.

"Oh, I don't any more. That was a youthful indiscretion."

"Youthful genius, I call it!" Marian persisted. "That night was full of music, Pat. A party at Betty Fletcher's. I came late, as usual, and the lights were very low, and Mr. Ridder was just beginning the Liebestod. Little you knew what an admirer you left in that darkened room."

"Shame on you!" exclaimed Patricia. "You've got to play for me now."

Waterloo.

"I haven't touched a violin since I left college," Barry protested. "I don't even know where the old fiddle is."

"Mine's upstairs," Marian interjected. "I'll bring it down."

And she bounded out of the room.

"I can't play any more," Barry held out lamely, "and I flatly decline to destroy Miss Lorn's illusions, or yours."

"No excuses," Pat said, very definitely. "Come on; we'll go into the drawing room."

As they passed through the old fashioned sliding doors, Marian, instrument in hand, reappeared.

"I'll accompany you," she insisted, "and I've brought the Liebestod."

"That's great," Barry said, "but I warn you—"

Patricia was opening the piano.

"I warn you," Barry said, "I'm going to make the most awful sounds human ears ever heard."

And, with that, he pulled together the double doors.

"Ouch!" he exclaimed.

They all turned to him.

"What's the matter?" Pat asked.

"Nothing serious," Barry replied, calmly. "I've slammed the doors on my fingers."

He held up his right hand.

It was crushed badly.

Everybody was extremely solicitous, and Pat wanted to send for the doctor.

"Certainly," Barry declared. "It's only broken the skin."

"I'll take care of it now," Patricia said, dispatching the butler for witch-hazel and bandages.

"Well, that's the end of the violin playing," Marian remarked.

"I'm afraid so. Wasn't I stupid?"

"Not at all," Patricia answered, manipulating the gauze deftly.

"The Judge wanted to go to bed early, anyway. I wonder whether you'd mind telephoning for Evans?"

"I'll run you home in the roadster," Pat volunteered, touching the bell again.

"It's been a swell evening," Barry insisted, giving Marian his left hand. "Pleasant surprise, meeting you here. This isn't good-by, is it?"

"That's up to you. I'll be around until Monday."

"Good night, Judge, and I hope you feel better tomorrow."

The roadster had been brought to the door, and Patricia climbed into it. "I'll be back soon," she promised.

Five minutes later, the car halted in front of the Ridder house.

"Thanks awfully," Barry said.

"Don't mention it."

There was something very like mockery in her voice.

"And, Mr. Gilbert—"

For an instant, Barry wasn't certain he had heard aright.

"You've got courage," Patricia went on. "I'll say that for you. And a grand sense of melodrama. I suppose you picked that up in Hollywood."

"I don't know what you're talking about," Barry floundered helplessly.

"No? Well, maybe I'll tell you sometime."

She laughed.

"Meanwhile"—as he alighted from the car—"I'd watch my step, if I were you."

"I'm all right," Barry rejoined.

"That depends," Patricia said. "You're being a little bit reckless, I think."

She put her foot on the accelerator, and the car moved away.

Voltaire and Catherine

The Empress Catherine of Russia was a great admirer of Voltaire, the great French philosopher, and once sent him a small ivory box made by her own hand as token of her admiration. Voltaire, in return, had himself taught knitting and started on a pair of stockings for her. He only half finished before his patience gave out, but unfinished as they were, he sent them on to the empress, as token of work also done by his own hands.

Uncle Phil Says:

Sympathy Has Power

Sympathy is a mighty power; even a touch of it in the dropping tear, the faltering voice, the quivering lip, will often move a soul to its center.

Usually, a person with a proud disposition has to get his entire satisfaction out of that.

Trouble can be met with resignation and it can be met with opposition.

If you are going to cast your bread upon the water don't tie an anchor to it.

Most arguers don't want to convince you so much as they want to startle you with their brilliance.

Face Forward

Restrain yourself from being a quitter. If you don't turn your back nobody can talk about you behind it.

Human race is becoming so mighty that it resents its inability to control the weather.

No man is his real self until he has developed his powers.

Taking a cold bath in the morning is like having a tooth pulled. You feel so much better afterward.

A MILLION miles on Firestone Tires without an accident. That is the record of Ab Jenkins, famous driver, who has driven on all kinds of roads and in all kinds of traffic in every state in the union. What a tribute to safe, dependable, tire equipment! Make this proof of performance your guide in choosing new tires to protect yourself and your family.

There are three important facts you should know about the tires you buy—

1. THE FACTS on TRACTION and NON-SKID SAFETY

A leading university in 2,350 tests has found that the new, scientifically designed tread on the Firestone High Speed Tire stops a car up to 25% quicker.

2. THE FACTS on BLOWOUT PROTECTION

Ab Jenkins used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires when he drove his 5,000-pound car over the hot salt beds at Bonneville, Utah, in the record-breaking time of 127 miles per hour, covering 3,000 miles in 23½ hours without a blowout or tire trouble of any kind.

3. THE FACTS on ECONOMY and NON-SKID MILEAGE

The largest transportation companies in the country, such as Greyhound, to whom safety and tire economy mean business efficiency, use Firestone Tires from Coast to Coast and from Canada to the Gulf. And our own test fleet records prove that the new Firestone High Speed Tire for 1936 gives you up to 25% longer non-skid mileage.

The Firestone High Speed Tire for 1936 proves by performance its superiority in all of these three qualifications. Make this proof of performance your yardstick of safety and value. Decide today to equip your car with new Firestone High Speed Tires for 1936—the safest driving equipment money can buy.

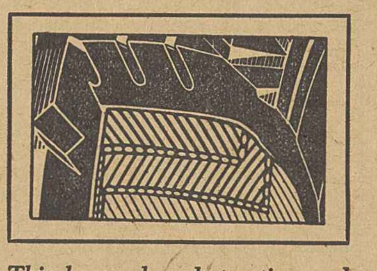
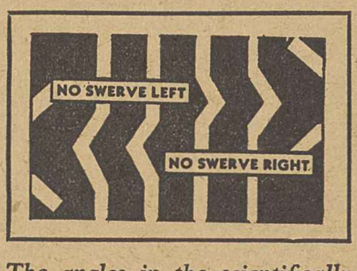
Gum-Dipping not only strengthens the cords but prevents heat inside the cords, where it insulates the tiny fibers against friction and protects Firestone High Speed Tires from blowouts.



This heavy, broad, traction and non-skid tread is held to the cord body of the tire with Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords; a patented construction, making the cord body and tread an inseparable unit.



The angles in the scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread are so placed as to stop a car quicker and without side-swerve. Its super-traction and non-skid efficiency have also been proved in the famous Pike's Peak Race where for eight consecutive years it has been used on the winning cars.

History
MAKING

That is what is covered in our Weekly News Review feature each week. It is an interpretation of the events of each week that are making the history of the nation and the world. It is prepared by Edward W. Pickard, one of the highly trained newspaper observers of the nation, and syndicated to a limited number of newspapers in the different states. It is the best feature of this character that goes to American readers from any source. You can make it the foundation of your discussion of world events with friends.

STEEL MAKERS say—"Ford buys the best steel." Other suppliers of materials and parts will tell you—"Nobody checks up as closely on quality and price as Ford."

This means a great deal to you as a motorist. It is our way of safeguarding the interests of every purchaser and it leads to this—"The mechanical depreciation on a Ford is less than most cars, especially after the first year."

This is one sign of the extra value in the Ford V-8. Accuracy in manufacturing is another. (The Ford is made to unusually close precision limits.) And there is a long list of fine-car features that are exclusive with Ford in the popular field.

Have you a V-8 engine in your car? You pay $1645 for it in any other car but Ford.

Does your car have Center-Poise Riding? Ford gives you this modern feature—"a front-seat ride for back-seat passengers."

Does your car have fool-proof Super-Safety Mechanical Brakes? The Ford V-8 gives you this proved design, with 186 square inches of braking surface.

Does your car have a genuine steel body structure? Does it have Safety Glass all around? Ford is the only low-price car that gives you this extra protection without extra cost.

You get these fine-car features in the Ford V-8 because of Ford manufacturing methods and low-profit policy.

GIRL SCOUTS

Last Saturday afternoon a scout rally was held out at the Alabama College Camp. It consisted of a demonstration of skill in various forms of scout activities and was in the nature of a contest between the boy scouts and troop one of the girl scouts. The contest was outstanding in that the girls and boys were most enthusiastic in demonstrating their skill and a spirit of good sportsmanship prevailed during the afternoon. The contest consisted of:

Lean-to building—Reno Villadsen, Donald Vaughan, W. J. Dunaway, Bob Anderson, Fred Pearson, Winston Peterson, Francis Peterson, Francis Killingsworth, Billy Rotenberry and Aston Johnson of the boy scouts. The girl scouts taking part in this were: Ollis Mills, Francis Bailey, Sylvia Appleton, Kathleen Coyle, Ethelle Nathews, Ann Appleton, Sara Ellen Stephens, Julia Ward, Myra Frost and Jeanne Appleton.

Cooking, boys, Reno Villadson, girls, Jeanne Appleton and Julia Ward.

Fire building, boys, Aston Johnson, W. J. Dunaway and Francis Killingsworth; girls, Sylvia Appleton, Sara Ellen Stephens and Myra Frost.

Nature, boys, Bob Anderson, W. J. Dunaway and Francis Killingsworth; girls, Ollis Mills and Francis Bailey.

First aid, boys, Donald Vaughan, and Bob Anderson; girls, Eleanor Reynolds, and Frances Baer.

Mapping and compass, boys, Bob Anderson and Clay Griffin; girls, Kathleen Coyle and Ethelle Nathews.

Judging distance, height and weight, boys, Donald Vaughan; girls, Jeanne Appleton.

The judges were: Mrs. Vaughan, Mrs. Wills, Dorothy Waites, field captain and Frances Lee, Golden Eagle Scout; Mr. Kennerly, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Orr and Mr. Burns. Rivalry was keen and skill very closely matched between the boys and girls. The boys won by one point in the total scoring. A "nose bag" picnic supper was enjoyed at the close of the rally.

Last week Mrs. Vaughan, Mrs. Appleton, Mrs. Kennerly, Mary Agnes Curtis and Dorothy Waites attended the Dixie Regional Scout Conference in Montgomery. The fellowship with scout leaders in Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee and Arkansas was inspiring. Much valuable information was given us through two leaders from national headquarters, Miss Oleda Scrotty and Miss Ann Roos. The Montevallo visitors were very much impressed over being the only town so well organized and represented from any state. Most of the leaders were from cities where there were paid as well as volunteer workers.

Building Cabins In State Parks

Construction of 45 over-night cabins has been completed in eight of Alabama's 13 new state parks and officials are perfecting plans for furnishing them, according to progress reports compiled by the National Park Service at its regional offices here.

Twelve cabins to accommodate over-night or week-end visitors have been built at Gulf State Park, south of Foley, and ten have been set up at DeSoto, near Fort Payne. Furniture already is being made for six of the structures at the northeast Alabama tract.

Colonel Page S. Bunker, Alabama State Forester who also is Director of State Parks, has disclised plans for furnishing, by early summer, at least one cabin at all parks where construction is complete. Although visitors are welcome at each of the 13 recreational areas now under development, state and federal authorities point out the exceptional scenic advantages offered during the spring months at Cheaha 2,200 acre tract located on Alabama's highest mountain, near Oxford, and at DeSoto. The rich wildflower growth on these rugged park lands soon will reach seasonal height.

In addition to the five over-night cabins at Cheaha, a custodian's dwelling and an imposing lookout tower have been completed. Six outdoor fire-places, a large picnic shelter and eight sets of outdoor tables and benches are in readiness at DeSoto. A lodge under construction there will be a striking example of sandstone in contrasting colors.

Alabama's network of new state parks is being established for public recreational use by Civilian Conservation Corps labor under joint supervision of state authorities and the National Park Service.

Technical work is under the immediate direction of J. H. Gadsby(regional officer of the National Park Service, which maintains a nation-wide Branch of Planning and State Cooperation, in charge of Conrad L. Wirth. Robert Fechner, director of Emergency Conservation Work, heads the entire CCC park program.

GROWING . . . to serve the growing South

More than $38,200,000 was spent by the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company in 1935 in taxes, wages and plant additions, improvements and replacements to meet the demands for high grade telephone service in the section it serves.

Most of the thirty-eight million dollars found its way back into the avenues of trade in the South.

To care for the 55,950 new telephones added and the eight per cent increase in the volume of traffic, the Company increased its personnel, expanded its plant and made a substantial improvement in the quality of its service.

Over 1,200 people were added to the payroll, making a total of seventeen thousand now employed by the Company. These additional people are all residents of towns and cities in this section. The annual payroll was nineteen million dollars, an increase of almost seven per-cent over the previous year.

Taxes paid to federal, state, county and municipal agencies totalled over six and one-half million dollars, or about one-eighth of the total revenues received from telephone users.

Having maintained the service and met every responsibility cheerfully during the depression, telephone men and women are continuing their efforts to provide more and better service at the lowest possible cost during 1936.
